SADDLE HORSE PRIZES FOR SUMMER RESORT BEAUTIES

THE readers of these columns are already familiar with the interesting Summer Resort beauty competition begun several weeks ago by this newspaper. To each of the five prettiest girls at the Summer Resorts this season will be given a saddle horse, with saddle and bridle. These are prizes well worth winning and American beauties from Maine to the Pacific Coast have responded with their photographs; many proud relatives and adoring admirers of modest young women have sent in photographs in behalf of pretty contestants.

Among the varied types of the American Girl printed on this page to-day the group of the three Chicago sisters is interesting. These young women, who live at No. 518 Monroe street, are spending this Summer in Richfield Springs. If a saddle horse prize should be awarded, say, to Miss Helena, would Miss Evelyn and Miss Florence feel a bit piqued?

The little photograph sent in by Miss Attie Belle Davis, of Kansas, shows the common custom of the West and South, where the women ride astride. The prize winners will

HAUNTED !— NEWPORT'S MOST FAMOUS MANSION

As the Thomas F. Walshes Succeed Astors, Vanderbilts and Potter Palmers at Historic Beaulieu, Bellevue Avenue Whispers of the Beautiful Ghost That Dwells There and Scares Servants Into "Giving Notice."

THE William Waldorf Astor house on Bellevue avenue haunted? Impossible! Ridiculous!

This is the query and some of the answers that have been floating about the Summer colony at Newport this season.

The idea that one of the Bellevue avenue mansions, which has had Astors and Vanderbilts for its occupants, could really be "haunted," like an old-fashioned New England country house, and looked at askance by all passers-by, seems past belief.

Yet such a tradition is attached to "Beaulieu," the big brownstone and brick house that stands just south of the famous marble house owned by Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont.

The taking of "Beaulieu" early in July by the Thomas F. Walshes, of Washington, lately of Colorado, revived all the mysteries and traditions that cling round this house, which is one of the oldest of the mansions on lower Bellevue avenue.

It has long been quietly told on shaded verandas in Newport that a "hoodoo" hangs over what is commonly called the Waldorf Astor house.

Death, misfortune, loss of riches and other calamities have befallen the long succession of residents on this estate during the past forty years.

F. L. Barreda, who built it in 1862, then the finest house in Newport, made a fortune almost in a day in the guano business in South America—and lost his money and his house almost as quickly.

In the quarter century that followed before the property was bought by William Waldorf Astor, the "Barreda Palace," as it was then called, had new owners and renters who came and disappeared in successive seasons, almost as rapidly as dwellers in a city tenement.

When Mr. Astor bought the estate it was thought that then at last the "luck" of the house and its occupants would be changed. That was about 1890. But the Astors occupied it only three or four seasons and then went abroad. Soon after that Mrs. Astor died at Cliveden, England.

Eclipse of the Brice Family.

The Senator Brices leased it for several seasons, bringing with them their $10,000 a year chef, a big retinue and all the other evidences of ostentatious wealth.

Then Senator Brice died—his reputed millions proved but an illusion, his family dropped from affluence almost to penury.

This and Mrs. Astor's untimely death revived the story of the "hoodoo" that hung over the occupants of the "Barreda Palace," which the prestige of an Astor could not wipe out.

Mrs. Potter Palmer next occupied the house during the Summers of 1899 and 1900. She entertained lavishly and brought her social campaign to a climax by the wedding of Julia Grant and Prince Michael Cantecuzene of Russia.

This ceremony, performed within the walls of the "Barreda Palace," was one of the most spectacular functions ever seen in America. It was like a royal wedding in Europe.

Representatives of all the European courts were present in the gold lace uniforms and costumes of their countries.

Yet, while the public was being dazzled by such brilliant displays, it is said that Mrs. Potter Palmer, cool-headed, practical woman of the world, as she was, trembled within the walls of the old "palace."

The ghost of the Barredas, it was hinted, had returned, and was haunting the halls and rooms of its old home.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, it is said, always felt a shiver as she went through the big dark front hall, after the guests had gone. Every door opening out of it had to be locked at night, as well as every door that she passed on the way up to her sleeping room.

For noises were heard at night like the rustle of silken skirts, as if the unbidden guest of the past were passing in and out the rooms and halls and opening and closing doors.

The climax came one night soon after the Grant wedding, when Butler White was putting out the lights on the lower floor.

In the half darkness, he saw an apparition, in white ball costume, with a Spanish mantilla thrown over her head, as if she had stepped from a heated ball room out upon the lawn and been suddenly chilled by the night air and mist flowing in from the sea.

The Butler Fell in a Swoon.

The figure in white glided in through the closed doors, swept past the terrified butler, with a silken rustle and passed up the broad staircase. The backward glance given as she ascended the stairs, while the mantilla fell from her head, revealed a face of dark Spanish beauty. That much Butler White saw, then fell prostrate on the hall floor.

Two footmen, hearing his fall, rushed up from the basement and picked up the butler. They said he looked like a dead man as he lay there with arms wide outstretched, hands clenched, and white, set face upturned with wide open, but apparently sightless eyes, staring at the ceiling.

The next morning, when the butler had fully recovered his senses, he declared that nothing would induce him to stay another day in the house. He did stay the rest of the season. But ever after that when he was in the front hall two footmen were always with him, either day or night, one stationed behind each of the two tall bay trees that flanked the entrance to the staircase.

These experiences of Mrs. Potter Palmer and her servants were kept strictly secret. No word about the affair was allowed to be breathed outside of the household, for Mrs. Potter Palmer could not bear to have it whispered about that she believed in ghosts.

But nevertheless the queer happenings were talked about by the servants and gardener's family and from them leaked out to a few confidential friends on the outside.

Then the query rose, what could be the cause of the haunting of the old mansion?

It was recalled that during the latter part of the Barredas' brief occupancy of the house a young and beautiful Cuban woman had been a guest. She was a relative of Mrs. Barreda, or Senora Barreda, who was herself a Cuban and one of the handsomest women that ever graced Newport society.

The Senorita Disappeared.

For some reason that was not explained at the time, and has never since been accounted for, the young senorita suddenly disappeared. She was not known to have gone away from the city, nor was she ever again seen in or about the house.

Soon after the final collapse of the Barreda fortune came. The family departed and ever after was lost to view. Senor Barreda, the Spanish-American who had dazzled Newporters with a fortune estimated at fifteen millions, a fabulous sum in those times—who had held the position of United States Minister to Peru, and was afterward sent on a diplomatic mission by the Government to England and France, became all of a sudden a common bankrupt.

Ten or fifteen years ago he died penniless in a small town up in New York State. His widow went back to Cuba, it is believed, though no one seemed to think it worth while to keep track of her.

Everybody thought her dead, when three or four years ago she reappeared at Newport. She was an old, broken-down woman with snow-white hair, the very ghost of the radiant beauty of former years.

For a few days she stopped at an unfashionable hotel, visited the old mansion in the guise of a stranger and went to see her old retainer, Gardener Williamson. Then she disappeared, telling no one whence or why she came nor whither she was going.

But her visit served the purpose of reviving the old traditions about the "Barreda Palace" and the ghost that has been supposed to haunt it during recent years.

It raised again the question of what really did become of the beautiful senorita who mysteriously disappeared so many years ago, and was it really her ghost that Butler White saw, or his own superstitious fancy?

But even these startling queries soon died out again in the rush and whirl of Newport's short Summer seasons. The cottage colony quickly forgot all about it. Only in the gardener's family the tradition was kept alive.

Gardener Williamson is a canny Scotchman. Never a word does the inquisitive Summer visitor get out of him about the traditions of the house or the Astor family. Of all the army of servants that come and go, season after season, with the different occupants, he alone stays on Winter and Summer. He "goes with the estate," as the saying is. He is Mr. Astor's special custodian and retainer, like the old family servants on an English estate.

In the Summer Mr. Williamson and his family live at the lodge near the gateway. In the Fall, after the Summer tenants of the big house are gone, the gardener and his family move into the basement for Winter quarters.

Rarely do they go into the upper part of the house, which is then desolate and gloomy enough, with bare doors and chandeliers and furniture swathed in ghastly white wrappings.

But on Autumn and Winter nights they hear strange noises overhead, as if heavy pieces of furniture were being moved, and doors opened and closed.

At such times, years ago, Gardener Williamson and his wife used to take lamps and grope their way through the upper rooms and corridors to make sure that no robbers had entered. But no trace of a burglar was ever found—and the gardener and his wife gradually settled down to the conviction that it was the ghost of the Barredas that was revisiting its old home and ought not to be molested.

So of late years when the noises upstairs are heard the gardener and his family only huddle together closer round the hearthstone. If a chance family friend is visiting them the story of the ghost is retold.

One such visitor suggested that Mr. Williamson put chalk on the rollers of the furniture, so that next day it might be seen just what pieces had moved during the night by the marks on the polished wooden floors.

What About the Walshes.

It was also conjectured that this might reveal a secret panel behind some picture or tapestry, in which some ghost or living intruder might be lurking.

Another friend of the gardener's family expressed the belief that if the house were ever torn down the skeleton of the senorita would be found within the walls of the lower story.

The parts of the house in which the ominous noises and apparitions most often occur are on the ground floor. The main hall, through which the ghost seems to pass, is a big, dimly lit passage, finished in dark Flemish oak.

Out of this opens a reception room, the library, almost as dark and sombre as the hall, a rather gloomy drawing room and a brilliant morning room, finished in white and gold, a startling contrast to the other rooms on the floor. Into the morning room pours a flood of light from the glass walled conservatory on the southeast side.

As Mrs. Potter Palmer left the house in 1900 she is said to have declared that under no circumstances would she ever pass another season in that house or in Newport, and she never has.

When the young Cornelius Vanderbilts took the house on a five years' lease in 1902, they knew nothing about the ghost stories connected with it. For three short seasons they occupied it during nineteen hundred and two, three and four. During their first Summer Mrs. Vanderbilt did the most brilliant thing of the season in giving a great garden party on the lawn, and had a play enacted in an outdoor theatre, erected for the purpose, for which an operatic company was brought on from New York.

But even during these gay seasons it is said that the ominous voices and ghostly apparitions appeared and so frightened Mrs. Vanderbilt that she decided to rent it this year. So while the Vanderbilts have been sojourning in Europe the Thomas J. Walshes have come into temporary posession of the estate.

Old Newporters are wondering whether the hard-headed Colorado mining king and his family, newly risen into the limelight of society, will escape the Barreda blight that has fallen, in one form or another, on every occupant of the old palace.

Mr. and Mrs. Walsh and pretty Miss Walsh have come from Washington after a brilliant social season there in their handsome brand new house, which is said to be quite the most dazzlingly fitted up mansion in the capital.

Everything in it is spotlessly new—so new as to carry with it the smell of varnish and the upholsterer's shop. How they will enjoy entering into the possession of something very like an old English estate, with a gardener and a ghost that "go with it," is a matter that is now exciting the liveliest discussion in certain select social circles in Newport's Summer colony.

Whether the mystery of the strange noises and apparitions seen in the grand old house will ever be solved is another question, which possibly is better fitted for the Boston Society for Psychical Research to take up than for the ordinary layman to attempt to solve.

Scientists Hope to Solve Many Questions of Momentous Importance.

THE total eclipse of the sun on the 30th of the present month will be, from a scientific point of view, one of the most important that has ever occurred.

Greater and more elaborate preparations than were ever known before have been made for its observation by the astronomers and the governments of many of the chief countries of the globe.

In fact, every civilized nation will be represented in some way at the many observing stations scattered for thousands of miles along the narrow track which the shadow of the moon will pursue across the earth's face.

In the first place, the line of totality runs over lands that, for the most part, lie within easy reach of the principal centres of the civilized population of the globe.

In the second place, the duration of the total obscuration of the sun after the moon passes over its face is longer than the average, amounting at the points best located for scientific observations to nearly four minutes.

In the third place, the eclipse occurs at a period of sunspot maximum, when the body of the solar orb is tremendously disturbed, as shown by the enormous yawning holes and the gigantic upheavals of vaporized metals and gases almost continually on its surface.

When these phenomena are at their height the coronal appendages surrounding the sun, and only visible during the darkness of an eclipse, assume gigantic proportions and strange and significant forms, by the study of which much may be learned concerning the mysteries of the sun's constitution and its electro-magnetic influence over the earth.

In the fourth place, this eclipse occurs at a time when many novel theories concerning the relations of the earth and the sun have been elaborated, and these theories are awaiting the proof or disproof of their truth, which may be afforded during the three or four critical minutes that the sun remains behind the moon, shooting out its wonderful telltale streamers into the darkened heavens.

In the fifth place many improved scientific methods of studying and photographing the coronal surroundings and volcano-like upbursts visible about the edge of the sun have been invented since the last previous eclipse, and these will now have their first practical application.

The same statement applies to new and improved methods of studying the nature of the various radiations given forth from the sun and which affect life upon the earth in ways as yet not clearly understood.

The spectroscopic apparatus, both for directly viewing the spectra of the light given forth by the corona and by the immense red flames called "prominences," and for photographing such spectra, which is to be employed on this occasion, will be more powerful than any ever before used.

Among the things to which special attention will be given by the observers are these:

It may surprise some readers who know that astronomers are accustomed to predict eclipses hundreds of years in advance to learn that there is still a slight uncertainty about the motions of the moon, and that owing to this uncertainty the instants of the beginning and ending of an eclipse sometimes vary a few seconds from the predictions.

By first ascertaining with all possible accuracy the exact latitude and longitude of each observing station on the earth and then noting with the aid of the most exquisite timing devices yet invented the precise moment when the edges of the sun and the moon make and break contact at each station, the amount of inaccuracy involved in the predictions can be ascertained.

Closely related to observations of this kind are others which will be undertaken by some of the observers to determine the exact position of the edges of the moon's shadow during the eclipse.

In this manner light will be thrown upon the true diameter and distance of the moon, and also upon the shape of the earth.

It is evident that any variation of the earth's form from the spheroidal shape calculated for it must produce a difference in the precise width and position of the shadow of the moon falling upon it.

Consequently by ascertaining with extreme care the position of the outer edges of the shadow track the shape of the earth's surface where it falls may be deduced.

The proposed measurement of the shadow track will be effected by placing observing stations near its edges, and from them noting where the true line falls.

It has been proposed to place at the disposal of Professor H. H. Turner, in Egypt, a squad of soldiers, to be stationed in a north and south line, cutting the edge of the shadow, each soldier being instructed to watch where the true edge comes, as the shadow passes. If it should fall between two soldiers whose positions were accurately fixed, the data would thereby be obtained for locating the shadow edge with much accuracy.

Second, a most careful search will be made, both visually and photographically, for intramercurial planets.

This search relates to one of the standing mysteries of astronomy, that, namely, of the so-called planet Vulcan.

Many years ago a French observer thought that he had discovered a planet between mercury and the sun and the name Vulcan was given to it.

In 1878, during an eclipse, two American observers averred that they had rediscovered Vulcan, which had not been reported as visible since its "discovery" in 1859.

But nobody has ever been able to find Vulcan since 1878, and most astronomers think that it does not exist.

Still, sufficient uncertainty remains to give great interest to the search, and this time the heavens will be photographed over a wide area all about the hidden sun, and if Vulcan or any other intramercurial planet is there, it can hardly escape detection.

Third, as already remarked, particular attention will be paid to the corona of the sun.

This consists of great bands and streamers of pale light, some straight and some curved, rising from a circular aureole, or "glory," which surrounds the black edge of the moon as it covers the sun.

The shapes of the streamers indicate that they are probably formed under the influence of the electro-magnetism of the sun. But there is a great deal of mystery about them, and it is only during the brief opportunities afforded by eclipses (for only then can they be seen, although, of course, they exist all the time) that they can be effectively studied.

They have often before been photographed, but on this occasion the number of the photographs made, and probably their excellence, will exceed anything of the kind hitherto undertaken.

Fourth. Not only will the corona be photographed with telescopes and cameras of great variety, but other instruments will be devoted to photographing the light given forth by the corona as it appears when spread out into a spectrum by a battery of prisms, or a "grating" ruled on a reflecting surface of glass.

In this way the tell-tale "spectroscopic lines" are recorded, each line being like a signature attesting the presence of the particular chemical element to which it belongs.

Recently it has been found that these lines not only reveal the nature of the substances which give forth the light, but also tell a great deal about the state in which those substances exist.

Special attention will be given to the mysterious line in the corona which indicates the existence around the sun of a gas whose like is unknown upon the earth and which has been called "coronium."

What part this gas plays in the sun is not yet known, but it may be of immense importance.

In this connection it may be recalled that helium was also first noticed by means of its spectroscopic lines in the sun before it had been found upon the earth, and now we know the extraordinary fact that when the gaseous emanation given forth by radium is kept isolated for a time it gradually becomes transformed into helium!

In addition to the study of the forms, and the spectroscopic nature of the corona, another set of observations will be devoted to ascertaining whether or not it is rotating about the sun.

For this purpose photographs made with instruments of precisely the same focus will be taken at stations as wide apart as possible—for instance, in Labrador and Spain, or in Spain and Egypt—and then these photographs will be combined in a stereoscope.

This will not only show whether any change of shape has taken place in the time elapsed between the taking of the two pictures, but it will also give an idea of the form of the corona in three dimensions, causing it to stand out with the perspective effect of a solid body.

Fifth. On this occasion, for the first time, elaborate observations will be made to ascertain the effect upon our atmosphere of the cutting off of the sun's radiation during the total phase of the eclipse.

During the eclipse of 1900, which was total in this country, it was found that a phenomenon called an "eclipse cyclone" manifested itself along the path of the shadow.

This was evidently due in part to the cooling effect of the shadow, setting up currents of wind whose direction was governed by the swiftly advancing cone of darkness as it swept along through the air and over the surface of the earth.

There was some evidence also of electric disturbance accompanying the eclipse cyclone.

The whole subject is comparatively a new one, and many observers will give attention to it with the hope of obtaining further knowledge

Sixth. Among minor features of the eclipse for the observation of which special preparations have been made are the curious "shadow bands" which are seen just at the moments when the lunar shadow reaches and leaves any particular point of observation.

These are somewhat like the reflection of swiftly moving waves on a level surface of water, and their true nature has not yet been ascertained.

Of a similar character will be the observations on the degree of obscuration in the air produced by the shadow. This will be measured by sensitive photometric apparatus.

Observers will also note such particulars as the effects on animals, which always show themselves singularly sensitive to the phenomena of a total eclipse.

The path of this eclipse runs from the middle of the Dominion of Canada to the peninsula of Arabia, crossing the Atlantic Ocean from the coast of Labrador to the northern coast of Spain. Consequently the passengers on steamships which happen to be crossing the North Atlantic on the 30th of August may by good fortune enjoy the exceedingly rare spectacle of a total solar eclipse at sea.

Valuable scientific observations cannot be made at sea, however, because of the lack of a steady foundation for instruments.

But as seen with the eye alone an eclipse at sea cannot but be a most imposing and wonderful exhibition.

In this country, unfortunately, the eclipse is not only partial, but it occurs very early in the morning.

The sun will rise partially eclipsed at Washington, and along the nothern Atlantic seaboard, at New York, Philadelphia and Boston the greatest obscuration will occur immediately after sunrise.

The moon will here cover about two-thirds of the diameter of the sun, and the morning, if cloudless, will appear to be unusually dark, but in order to see the eclipse it will be necessary to use a dark glass for looking at the sun.

With the aid of such a glass — either a thickly smoked glass or a piece of "black glass" used by workers in electric lamp factories—the vast scallop cut out of the round disc of the sun by the opaque globe of the moon may be clearly seen.

But it is only within the track of the shadow, about a hundred miles wide, where the eclipse is total, that the whole sun will be obscured and a darkness resembling night will fall for three or four minutes upon the earth.

This track begins in the centre of the Canadian Dominion, west of Hudson Bay; crosses the projecting southern finger of that bay; traverses Central Labrador, and then, passing over the Atlantic, as already described, reaches the northern coast of Spain and runs across Spain south of and parallel to the range of the Pyrenees, missing the Spanish capital, Madrid, by a few miles; but passing over the old cities of Leon, Valladolid, Burgos, Valencia and many other places; then hits the Balearic Islands, in the Mediterranean Sea; touches the African coast in Algiers, and runs along close to the coast through Tunis, reaches and crosses Egypt and the Red Sea, and finally ends in Central Arabia.

All along this track, as far as it lies on land, parties of astronomers will be stationed.

It is evident that the phenomenon is hardly worth looking for where it ends just as the sun comes up, but with a clear sky it might be worth while to get up and see the eclipse—viewing the sun, as before suggested, with a dark glass—anywhere along or east of the line where the middle of the eclipse occurs at sunrise.

It will, of course, be understood that there is no use in looking for the corona or any of the other wonderful appearances visible about the sun when it is entirely hidden behind the moon except from places situated within the narrow path of totality, and the position of that path from Labrador to Egypt has already been described.

At Greenwich, Washington, Paris and other points where important observatories exist, spectrographic photographs of the sun will nevertheless be taken at the time of the eclipse in order that this may be compared with photographs made in the path of totality.

While the corona can only be seen and photographed during the total phase of an eclipse, the red prominences at the sun's edge can be seen and photographed at any time, with the aid of a spectroscope, and the photographs of these made outside the path of totality may, when compared with those made inside that path, help to throw light on the relation between the prominences and the corona.

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Invited His Sweetheart and Friends to His Suicide.

The Tragic Revenge of Don Cabrera, Who Sought Death on the Horns of a Bull to Punish the Girl Who Jilted Him.

Don Jorge de la Cabrera.

UNTIL he invited all his friends and the beautiful girl herself to his spectacular suicide on the horns of a vicious bull, nobody in all that section of Mexico supposed that any woman on earth would refuse the hand of Jorge de la C. Cabrera, the handsomest, wealthiest and most eligible young man in San Luis Potosi. Yet Senorita Anita Reguerra de Baranco had done so, and this is the ghastly way he chose to put her to shame before all her acquaintances.

Cabrera was of the type of Mexicans that this Republic loves to idealize. Not short and wrinkled as are so many, but tall, smooth-skinned and of magnificent muscular physique. His hacienda on the outskirts of the town was pointed out to all visitors and invitations to his entertainments were eagerly accepted by those fortunate enough to receive them.

The young man dressed handsomely in the elaborate Mexican costume, extremely becoming to a man of his face and build.

The dark-eyed beauties of San Luis Potosi were a little piqued that this dashing young man seemed not quite so susceptible to their charms as others of his race and sex. They kept a sharp eye on each other, these Mexican girls, and there was much envy when of late Cabrera was seen in his big Mexican saddle clattering to the De Baranco residence.

That Senor de Baranco welcomed his attentions was evident. A hearty handshake and a stirrup cop were but part of the hospitality shown by the father in the short intervals before and after discreetly surrendering his shaded plazza to the visitor and his daughter.

"Lucky girl," thought every one as each successive visit made it seem more probable that she had "caught" him. The young blood of the town insisted that he was lucky, too. For there was none prettier, and the senor, her father, was almost as wealthy as Cabrera.

One evening, as usual, he dashed magnificently through the town, and as usual there were sighs from behind latticed windows. Twenty minutes later he returned, his horse walking slowly with the reins hanging loose. The rider stared straight in front of him and he failed to notice the graceful salutations of one or two of his old friends.

"Kill the bull," said the Don, without looking up.

"Ah, that is well, senor," said the vaquero, "for the beast is a mankiller. The men are all afraid of him. It would be suicide to enter the corral with him.

Don Cabrera wheeled around and spoke as if an idea had suddenly occurred to him.

"No, don't kill him. Do nothing to tame him. I will attend to the animal myself."

The faithful vaquero's protests were cut short.

The next morning the Don, looking as if he had not slept well, surveyed his vicious bull and gave instructions for his taming.

"I'll make a gay event of it," he declared. "Leave the bull in the corral, and don't try to subdue him. He'll not be dangerous long after I have approached him."

Forthwith Cabrera issued invitations to all his friends to assemble at his hacienda on the appointed day. He said nothing of his intention to subdue the bull. The invitations were issued with all the flowery language in which the people of Spanish blood delight. Cabrera was a host of wide fame, and an invitation to his hacienda, as usual, was eagerly hailed. The invitations went to several score of guests, and but few failed to attend.

When the day of the function arrived the guests arrived from the haciendas for miles around, some coming a full day's journey to order to be a guest of Don Cabrera. In carriages and on horseback they came. The women were in all their festive attire, with dresses of all the colors of the rainbow. The men were no less lavish of their finery, and many were the handsomely tooled jackets of the finest workmanship, and trousers that were the masterpieces of the tailor's art, while not for many acres of land could have been bought the costly sombreros, laded with lace of gold and silver, which the men wore.

One of the last carriages to arrive brought the De Barancos, father and daughter. As the Senor alighted to seize his host's hand, he said:

"I was fairly compelled to order my Anita to come. She had a terrible dream last night that something would happen here, and—foolish girl that she is—still has a premonition."

"Ah, Senor," said Cabrera, in a voice evidently meant for all to hear; "we are all deeply indebted to you, for my entertainment would fall flat without her."

This speech caused a buzz of comment among the guests, who understood it to mean that an announcement of the engagement would follow later.

The old senor smiled wisely and few noticed the exchange of glances between Anita and the young Don, who, sombrero in hand, helped her from the carriage. After that Cabrera did not look at her again but once. She, however, followed him with her eyes continually, and more than one scheming mamma whispered:

"Anita looks troubled—she is not sure of him yet."

After greetings had been exchanged and refreshments had been served in the roomy patio of Cabrera's luxurious home, the host invited his guests to repair to the corral. They were puzzled to understand his purpose, but followed gladly, for Cabrera was known as a right good fellow, and any innovation that he might introduce was welcome.

The Corral on the Right Is Where the Suicide Took Place.

The large corral was empty. It was the heaviest barred of all the enclosures on the grounds. Other corrals adjoined it, and on the farther side, by a gate which led into a smaller enclosure were a number of vaqueros.

Cabrera smiled as he noted the looks of wonderment on the faces of his guests. In a few words he explained his purpose. He said that he had been told that one of the bulls was unmanageable, was dangerous, was a man-eater. He said that he had been cautioned against it.

He explained that he had never known the word fear, and that least of all would he cringe before any dumb brute. He announced his intention to master the beast by sheer force of will. He declared that he would tame the mad animal until it had no more spirit than one of his dairy cows.

A loud protest went up. The women, who thrilled with pride, nevertheless were on the verge of hysterics, and they appealed to him not to attempt so rash a thing while the men, who understood even more clearly the folly of what Cabrera intended doing, tried to dissuade him from his purpose.

Men have hypnotized bulls, and by sheer force of an unwincing eye and a motionless body held the animal off. In the bull rings of Mexico the feat has been repeated more than once by the toreros. Even women have done it, but never without taking a grave risk.

While they might look on and see a professional bull fighter gored to death, these guests of Cabrera felt that this was a very different matter. Cabrera was not a skilled bull fighter, while his life was precious to all those present.

Anita turned to her father and urged something upon him. As he hesitated, she grasped his arm and whispered something more pointed to Cabrera and almost pushed the old gentleman toward him. Her face was pale and frightened.

Cabrera received their protests scornfully, looking the while at the senorita. Just as her father started toward him he vaulted over the fence surrounding the corral and said:

"My friends will please not distract my attention by their advice."

Then, turning his face to the gate of enclosure, he cried out to his vaqueros to let down the bars.

As the bars were let down the bull came slowly forward. He was a magnificent animal, as his opponent was a magnificent man. The bull was a tawny red, of the long, rather lank build that is characteristic of the best animals that are seen in the plazas de toros of the sister republic, when the national sport of bull fighting is on.

The bull entered slowly, his body and head almost rigid. His eyes inflamed by the attacks of flying insects to which he had been purposely left exposed the night before, roved wickedly.

Cabrera, far from hypnotizing the bull, was looking steadily at the Senorita Anita with an expression afterward described in many different ways. The girl's eyes were round with horror as she returned his gaze. If any one was hypnotized it was she. She tried to call out and could not.

The tawny sides expanded as the breath rushed in with a whistle. Out it came again with a roar as the [illegible] and horns went down and the brute launched himself at the man.

What was their astonishment, then, to see Cabrera, without taking his eyes from Anita, fall on one knee, and, waving his hand at the paralyzed girl, calmly receive the plunge of the animal full in the chest.

For a moment the audience was motionless, awestruck, as the body of Cabrera sailed through the air. Then the purpose of their host dawned upon some of the men, and they rushed for poles, bars, weapons, anything with which they might drive off the furious animal.

The senorita and half the other women had fainted, the rest turned their heads or covered their eyes.

Again Cabrera was whirled through the air, and a third time the bull plunged. Instead of catching the prostrate man up a tossing him, the bull thrust his dead horn through Cabrera's chest and gor him deeply. By this time a dozen men we within the corral with weapons. One Cabrera's closest friends, a young Mexica of land possessions, snatching a rifle fir almost without aim. The bullet went tru and the bull fell beside its victim.

Cabrera was gently raised. His face was contorted with pain, but his lips were closed firmly. He was still conscious, and he opened his eyes and looked weakly about him.

"Why did you do it?" a dozen voices asked. "What could you mean?"

Cabrera's only reply was a horribly contorted smile, as his eyes found the senseless Anita. Then his heart stopped.

He was borne to the house, where the body was laid out in state.

The guests, who had been present at the tragedy in their gayest garb, returned two days later, clad in deepest mourning. The gay, popular young Cabrera, owner of many acres of the richest land near San Luis Potosi, the most eligible of all the eligibles, was dead, and his friends sadly heard the last rites said over his body.

The sanity and even the life of Senorita Anita Reguerra de Baranco are about despaired of.

Those who have watched at her bedside and caught her delirious utterances think the rash Don went to his death for nothing more than a lover's revenge upon the girl who had refused to marry him.

A Slight Arch Indicates Truthfulness and Reliability.

Extremely High Arch Indicates Noble Lineage.

THE interesting discovery has been made that the feet are much more expressive of character and disposition than either the hands or face. This being the case, what can be easier than to choose a future wife or husband by an intelligent reading of the pedal extremities.

The face does not always reveal character. Neither do the hands. So it is no use depending upon them as guides in selecting a life partner. But with the feet it is different.

Beware of the bony foot. It is liable to indicate bad temper. On the other hand, a plump foot almost surely signifies amiability, a jovial temperament and an easy-going disposition.

Young man, do you think of getting married? If so, cast an eye upon the foot of your lady-love—slyly, of course, and without attracting her attention—and make sure that it is adequately clad in flesh. The sign is not always reliable, but it is at least a good indication.

If she has a noticeably high instep, then rest assured that her character is sedate and dignified. Perhaps, unless you have come to know her well, she will appear at first rather cold and unapproachable. In all likelihood she is proud, but it should not be taken for granted that she is haughty or unamiable at heart.

The foot is to be regarded as a typical member, partaking of the peculiarities of the general physique. If a woman, for example, has a perfect figure, she is likely to have a pretty foot. If she is tall, her foot will be long, or vice versa. If she is plump, her foot will be likewise: if bony and angular, her foot will be built on the same plan.

And you, damsel fair: if you are contemplating matrimony, keep the same ideas in mind; for they apply to men as well as to women. And remember in particular that a flat foot is likely to signify a reliable husband. That sort of foot goes with the everyday kind of man, about whom there are no "frills," and who is plain and open in his speech. He says what he means and does not tell fibs. There is more in the phrase, "To come out flat-footed" than is commonly supposed.

Is there anybody who would not understand the phrase, "a stupid foot?" The idea conveyed to the mind, obviously, is that of a clumsy and shapeless foot, in-

The Tragic Romance of Millionaire Garth's Widow.

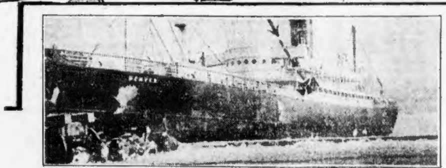
Hubert Hartigan, the Groom, Who Has Married the Millionaire Banker's Widow.



STEAMSHIP DENVER FROM WHICH MR GARTH JUMPED.

FROM groom in his master's stables to bridegroom at the wedding of the millionaire widow who, as the wife of Banker Granville W. Garth, paid him wages for menial services—that is the latest romantic chapter in the mystery surrounding Banker Garth's suicide from the deck of a steamship in the Gulf of Mexico less than a year ago.

This news has come to the dead banker's former associates from Ireland, whither the groom migrated somewhat unexpectedly not long after the tragic death of Mr. Garth.

Why did Banker Garth kill himself? Is the answer to that question suggested by another:

Why did the banker's widow a few months later follow her former groom across the Atlantic? Did she tell the whole truth when she said:

"To educate my two children in Europe?"

Did the romance with her former groom begin after the Widow Garth had again met Hubert Hartigan, now a dealer in horses, in Ireland?

What were the "domestic troubles" which business associates of the president of the Mechanics' National Bank, of New York, said were responsible for the physician's order which sent him on a voyage to Galveston, Tex., last November? And what was the news he received when the ship touched at Key West, which—it was remembered when he was missed from the vessel in the Gulf of Mexico—had depressed him so?

"A Victim to Southern Chivalry."

Banker Garth was a member of a proud old Southern family which for two hundred years had kept its name free from the slightest stain. He was noted for the strictest integrity in his business dealings. By honest methods he had acquired a large fortune. His old and honored name was his dearest possession. To preserve it without blemish was a passion with him."

Months before his death it was known that he was disturbed because his wife—who had inherited $4,000,000—had developed a passion for riding and for frequenting "horsey" society. He was always busy at his desk at the bank, and he had no share with her in these amusements. They were contrary to the traditions of his family.

After his death the directors of the Mechanics' National Bank adopted a most complimentary memorial, and the cashier, Andrew Knowles, said for publication:

"Mr. Garth died as the result of a family matter. He died a victim to Southern chivalry — trying to shield his family name."

No one has said that Banker Garth had any real cause for grievance against his wife.

There was no scandal—no breath of suspicion against her. The query is persistent, however.

Did Mr. Garth perceive signs of a growing infatuation, not yet recognized by his wife, between her and the handsome, gentlemanly young Irishman, who, though holding the position of a sort of upper servant, was accepted as a pleasant companion by both husband and wife. And did he come to the conclusion that if he continued to stand in the way of the logical and proper development of a situation so romantic his wife's reputation and his own cherished name were bound to suffer? And from motives of the most exaggerated chivalry and family pride witnessed in these modern times did he kill himself in order to leave her free to marry again?

There are known details of the rise of Hubert Hartigan in fortune and in the esteem of the Garth family that lend some force to such an argument.

Mrs. Garth was one of the two daughters of the late James Jennings McComb, of Dobbs Ferry, New York. As Lillie McComb, heiress to a fortune of $4,000,000, she reached the age of eighteen only comfortably supported by her father, who had the strictest notions of economy. Thirteen years ago she married Granville W. Garth, but as he was accustomed to live unpretentiously her head was not turned by the improved conditions which surrounded her.

Years passed away and her father died, and suddenly she found herself absolute mistress of a great fortune.

She acquired an enthusiastic liking for outdoor sport. For a time, during the Summer and Autumn months, she was almost daily on the golf links. Then she became even more enamoured of horseback riding. Having had little experience in this accomplishment she betook herself to a fashionable riding academy for lessons.

Here she was placed in charge of a handsome stalwart young Irishman, an employe of the establishment, and after the first few lessons would accept the instruction of no other attendant. Young Hubert Hartigan was the son of a professional trainer and rider in England and on the Continent, from whom he had evidently inherited his knowledge of horses and quite a remarkable ability in training and handling them.

Under the young Irishman's tuition Mrs. Garth soon outstripped all the other pupils of the academy. When the limits of that institution became too contracted to satisfy her she secured the services of Hartigan to attend her at rides through Central Park and back to the school.

Delighted with her new accomplishment, and finding Hartigan so useful to her, Mrs. Garth persuaded her husband to give him employment. Accordingly he left the riding school and accepted a position as nominal head of the Garth stables, but with so many friendly privileges attached thereto as to make the other Garth servants extremely envious. There was so little doubt about Hartigan's experience respecting horses that the banker intrusted him with the purchase of several of the riding variety for his stables.

Employed Him as Groom.

He was also charged with the duty of instructing the two Garth children to ride. After that the mother and children and the handsome groom often made an attractive cavalcade upon the country roads of the neighborhood. Eventually Mrs. Garth became so enthusiastic about her horses that she decided to have a stock farm and a track of her own. In this ambition she met the opposition of her husband. But being now vastly and independently wealthy, she went ahead in spite of his objections. One of the best stock farms in New Jersey was purchased in the name of Hubert Hartigan, and he was established there as its manager.

Mrs. Garth sent him to Ireland to purchase other horses. On his return, besides the horses he brought over his pretty, blue-eyed, rosy-cheeked sister, whom he installed in his house on the farm. At a little distance Mrs. Garth leased a mansion for her own occupancy when she felt so disposed, and she was superintending the placing of furniture in the same when the news of her husband's mysterious death was received.

Prior to the purchase of this stock farm there was a story current to the effect that Mrs. Garth valued her groom's services so highly that she nipped in the bud his romance with a rich young woman pupil at the riding academy. It was said that, learning that her riding master had practically engaged himself to a girl worth $2,000,000, whom he met frequently while riding in the park, she went to the girl's mother with the whole story, whereupon the lovelorn young woman was forthwith shipped off to Europe. It was also said that the principal reason for purchasing the stock farm was Mrs. Garth's desire to keep young Hartigan away from similar temptations in the future.

It appears that at this time the relations between Mrs. Garth and her husband were considerably strained. Mr. Garth's uncle, Eugene F. Jones, of Memphis, Tenn., told of getting a letter from Mrs. Garth's mother saying that Mrs. Garth would not speak to the members of her family. She mentioned that family conferences with Mrs. Garth were fruitless. Mr. Jones said that Mr. Garth then had a plain talk with his wife, soon after which he took the steamship which carried him on his fatal voyage toward Galveston.

Very little has been made known about the exact manner in which Mr. Garth sought death.

When the morning came upon which Mr. Garth was missed, when the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn was that he had either jumped or fallen overboard, passengers recalled his silent, morose and even mournful disposition, and suspected that the burden he was carrying had been too great for him to bear. But they did not realize, as was made clearer later, the motives of that Southern chivalry which prompt the sacrifice of life to promote the happiness and wellbeing of others.

Family Conferences Fruitless.

Most of these circumstances were made public in the weeks following the mysterious suicide of Granville W. Garth. Before Spring Hubert Hartigan had gone back to Ireland. Irving E. Salmon, who said he was attorney for Hartigan, issued a long statement in defence of that young man, saying that he was an educated man of good family who came to America to increase a horse business which his father had already established in Ireland, that he had never been treated in the capacity of a servant in the Garth family, and that he had always enjoyed the high esteem of both husband and wife.

The wide publicity given to all these circumstances in connection with the Garth family was naturally very trying to Mrs. Garth. Consequently, her friends were not surprised when three months later she left with her two children for Europe, saying that she would remain abroad for a long time, superintending their education.

The news of her marriage to her former groom, Hubert Hartigan, gives no details except that it was a church wedding and in Ireland. It is said that the wedding occurred several weeks ago and that the bride had endeavored to have the announcement delayed until she could herself make it in a way that might bring upon her less criticism and notoriety than seems likely to be the result at present.

The evidence is almost startling that this romantic denouement is just what Banker Garth prepared for in chivalrously making it possible.

Peep at Her Foot First—and the Interesting Reasons Why.

With the sole of your foot you are, doubtless, practically unacquainted, and yet it is quite a wonder study in itself. It is the only part of your body, barring the palm of the hand, that is hairless—for all of the rest of your person, even from early childhood, is covered with a downy fuzz—and, having little pigment, it will not tan or freckle under any provocation. But the most interesting thing about it is the curious arrangement of ridges with which it is covered. The pattern of the ridges on your foot is unlike that of any other foot in the world, and, as you will see if you will examine it, it forms on the heel and on the ball of each toe odd-looking spirals and whorls. You will see, then, that there is a good deal more to be known about your feet than you have probably imagined.

Each of your feet, so far as its skeleton is concerned, is composed of twenty-six bones. Seven bones form the heel and back portion and are so arranged as to make an arch of the instep. Further forward lie five parallel bones, the fore part of each forming the ball of the toe to which it is joined. There are two bones in the big toe and three in each of the others. As a whole, it is a wonderfully compact little apparatus and is operated by an equally marvellous arrangement of muscles and tendons.

A great deal is said about the deformity of the modern civilized foot, produced artificially by the wearing of shoes, but there can be no question that it represents a type of pedal development far superior to that of the foot of early, shoeless man, which was flat like a negro's. The foot that is absolutely flat, the hollow of it "making a hole in the ground," as is jocularly said of Jim Crow's foot, is a sign of low grade physique.

The human foot in its highest development has a lofty instep, and, if the arch beneath is high enough to allow a stream of water to flow under, it is popularly supposed to be a sign that the person is of noble lineage. But, as a matter of fact, this physical characteristic, for no reason that has ever been adequately explained, seems to have more to do with geography than anything else. People in the Southern States have smaller feet and higher insteps than those of the North, while the Western foot is longer, larger, flatter and more aggressive in type than the foot of the East.

KILL THAT MOSQUITO!

How Mosquitoes Kill Us.

FOR twenty centuries the world has endured the mosquito as an annoying nuisance; now we know he is a mortal enemy. The mosquito is the one and the only source of yellow fever! If the mosquito can be exterminated, yellow fever ends. And this is true, also, of malaria, Roman fever, elephantiasis, filariasis, and probably leprosy and several other diseases.

Science knows all this, but the public mind has not yet grasped it; hundreds of country doctors and druggists have not yet gotten it through their heads. When they studied at medical schools ten and twenty years ago it was taught that yellow fever was "caught" like smallpox or diphtheria. Malaria (the word means "bad air") was believed to be caused by stagnant, putrid water in miasmic marshes.

But we know better now. The eye of the bacteriologist has seen the germs under the microscope; is as familiar with their habits and family history as the naturalist is with the habits and history of rabbits.

Briefly stated, a certain species of mosquito called Stegomyia fasciata (found chiefly in Southern climates) is capable of biting a yellow fever patient and taking into its intestines the patient's fevered blood. In this blood are fever germs.

They are so tiny that they pass with ease through what were supposed to be bacteria-proof filters. They enter the stomach and intestines of the mosquito, where they remain from ten to thirteen days, finally breaking through the walls of the stomach and proceeding through the tissues of the insect to the salivary glands and the extremity of the proboscis.

From this point of vantage the germs transfer themselves to the blood of the next person bitten by the mosquito.

There is no other way for yellow fever to be transferred from one patient to another save through the specially adapted organism of the wretched little Stegomyia mosquito.

It is only through a ten to thirteen days' incubation inside a mosquito that yellow fever germs can be produced. Eating, sleeping and living with a yellow fever sufferer will not produce infection. And what has been abundantly proved true of this disease has been demonstrated beyond a doubt in malaria, Roman fever, elephantiasis and filariasis.

How the mosquito sucks in a yellow fever germ, harbors it in its stomach until it is ready to pass on up to its salivary glands and beak and then inoculates its next victim with yellow fever.

Fighting the Yellow Fever Mosquitoes.

New Orleans, Aug. 18.

THE efforts of the United States Government officials to stamp out the yellow fever epidemic are directed entirely at the mosquito.

Practically all doctors who have come in contact with the yellow fever situation are unanimous in the opinion that the mosquito must be hunted out and exterminated all over the country, and finally all over the globe. Until this is done man's blood is on his own head if he dies from yellow fever, malaria and probably any one of many other diseases, including leprosy and possibly consumption.

After the mosquito war is ended another will probably be declared upon the flea and the bedbug. These creatures, until recently looked upon as mere nuisances, to be treated more humorously than seriously, are now accused of being the direct cause of disease epidemics, such as the spinal meningitis outbreaks in several of the large cities, particularly New York, last Winter.

Physicians point out that the death rate would be lower and the general health much higher if the country were full of tigers, bears, rattlesnakes, Indians, etc., etc., instead of mosquitoes, as it is at present. Laws, boards of healths and commissions can never bring this about, however, until people universally come to their aid.

A general campaign of public education on the subject is therefore the first step, and this has already been begun by the Government at Washington, which is shipping thousands of pamphlets on the mosquito to the Southern States. It is slow work driving out old ideas, and many think it will not be accomplished until the older generation has passed away and the younger, in whom new ideas are more easily planted, has to take its place. Many believe that every living creature has some useful place in the world, if only to feed birds or other useful creatures.

They are offended at the idea of deliberately exterminating any created thing and hate to believe that it is necessary.

The yellow fever scourge in New Orleans, malaria all through the tropic and temperate zones—two of the most dreaded diseases that prey upon human beings—are both conclusively proved to be due to the mosquito, and to that blood-sucking and germ-infecting insect only. Kill that mosquito wherever you find it. Destroy its breeding places. Keep your back yards clean and dry, your rain water barrels tightly covered, and rigidly exclude the pest from your sleeping apartments.

During the last few weeks New Orleans has reported more than three hundred cases of yellow fever. Remembering the fearful mortality from this disease in the past, the city has been on the verge of a panic. Many have fled. Freight and passenger trains have been quarantined. The city is practically governed by the sanitary authorities. The whole country has been alarmed.

Happily the intelligence and energy of the sanitary officers have now resulted in checking the spread of the disease. Only a small per cent of the cases have been fatal, and there is no practical reason why the Crescent City should be isolated or avoided by those having business there.

How thoroughly alive the authorities are to the mosquito responsibility for the whole trouble is shown by the following statement made by Dr. J. H. White, of the Marine Hospital service, in explanation of the rule compelling the fumigation of all freight cars, and including interesting facts about this particular mosquito:

"I assume that everybody knows the fact that yellow fever is transmitted solely by the mosquito, from one man to another man. We must, therefore, consider whether or not our infected mosquito is likely to become an inhabitant or a passenger in freight parcels. The particular mosquito transmitting this disease is one of the most easily destructible of these insects, being killed by a very slight pressure.

"In freight parcels of any sort, a mosquito in a box would unquestionably be caught and crushed during the jostling in transit. Again, remember that freight packages originate in warehouses and factories and stores, which places are not the habitat of sick people, and the infected mosquito will, therefore, not be found in such places.

"It is a conceivable fact that a mosquito from a sick room may drift into the street, but the habit of this mosquito, in so doing, is to seek the first clean water to lay its eggs and then die.

"It is extremely improbable that she will take up her abode in a place of business (warehouse or factory) rather than to seek a congenial pool of clean water to deposit her eggs, in accordance with nature's provision in her case.

"Referring to more special cases, namely commodities, such as coffee, sugar and rice in bagging, I have to say, not as a matter of opinion, but of real knowledge, that such articles as these above will in the very handling, absolutely annihilate any mosquito which may have sought refuge in the crevices of the bagging. The weight and shifting character of a bag of coffee or sugar is an absolute guarantee of the destruction of this little insect the first time such a bag is thrown to the floor of a car or roughly handled on a truck.

"There is no possible way in which yellow fever may be transmitted other than by the mosquito, and freight cannot, under any circumstances, be infected in this way, but only so far as it might become the residence of an infected mosquito."

Probed by Many Experiments.

The belief that yellow fever is conveyed by the female of the mosquito, known as stegomyia fasciata, rests on scientific experiments and observations equally as conclusive as those relating to malaria and the anopheles.

Dr. Carroll, the distinguished medical investigator who was sent to Cuba by the United States Government for the purpose of determining the best methods of fighting yellow fever there, says in his official report:

That positive statement was not made until after the most searching investigation, carefully guarded against error.

According to the old belief, yellow fever was conveyed in much the same manner as scarletina, diphtheria and smallpox; that is, by personal contact or contact with articles infected by the sick. These infected articles are called fomites, and with regard to yellow fever this term included everything supposed to carry infection. Some quarantine authorities included in this class pigiron and stone ballast from infected localities.

The experiments conducted by this Government in Cuba demonstrated the harmlessness of fomites by the placing of three young American men for twenty consecutive nights in a room to sleep upon and under bedclothes soiled by previous use in the yellow fever hospitals. The room was kept moist and warm and garnished with articles taken from fatal cases of yellow fever. Contact was as intimate as possible with these supposedly infected articles; but mosquitoes were excluded and no one got sick. Similar exeriments were repeatedly made with the same result.

Subsequently four out of seven of the persons experimented upon were infected by means of the mosquito. A room was prepared to exclude all possibility of infection by fomites and infection by mosquitoes promptly followed inoculation.

Dr. Quitman Kohke, health officer of New Orleans, has declared that yellow fever is conveyed by the stegomyia fasciata mosquito, but the germs of the disease may be taken by the mosquito only during the first three or four days of the fever; after that time the blood of the patient cannot infect the mosquito. The germs require about twelve days to migrate from the stomach of the insect to the salivary glands; from which they may be injected through the mosquito's biting organ into the human blood-stream. Mosquitoes after becoming infections are capable of inoculating the disease into the human at intervals of three days—the period of feeding—for practically an indefinite time.

Elsewhere on this page are briefly stated the seven distinct stages through which the yellow fever germ passes from the time the insect takes it from the blood of an infected person, through its development and multiplication in the insect's body, to its final injection into the body of the human victim as the mosquito drinks its blood.

The Same with Malaria.

These retails were established beyond question by long and patient scientific investigation, and their truth is accepted by the whole scientific world. They are exactly similar to the results of scientific investigations made several years ago, which proved that another species of mosquito—the anophele—infected human beings with malaria, which disease it was impossible to contract in any other manner.

In his exhaustive treatise on the subject Sir James Crichton Browne, F. R. S., makes these authoritative statements:

"The most distinguished physician in America, Dr. Osler, writing in 1898, said: 'We do not as yet know how the poison of malaria reaches the system.' Writing to-day he would have to say: 'We now know definitely that the poison of malaria reaches the system through the proboscis of the anopheles mosquito.'

"Malaria is still the most grievous disease burden of our species, and is, as I have said, very widely diffused. Covering a broad belt on both sides of the equator, it reaches its maximum of frequency in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but continues to be epidemic for some distance into the temperate zone, with diminishing severity and frequency in the higher latitudes, and appears not infrequently in epidemic form in yet other regions.

"Although the death rate from the disease is not high, yet the cases of it are so enormous in number that the aggregate mortality is huge. Thus in India, in 1897, the mortality from fevers in the civil population was returned at 5,026,725, or five times that of any other disease. * * * At this moment malaria is causing a larger human mortality than any other disease, not excluding tuberculosis."

For centuries before the mosquito cause of malaria was proved the only known means of combating malaria was by preparations of the tropical bark called cinchona—quinine. Wherever the anopheles mosquito breeds it is impossible for any human being to escape the ravages of malaria except by constant drugging with quinine. Doses of twenty grains a day have been demonstrated in the average case to kill the germs in the blood as fast as they develop. Experimenters who protected themselves against mosquito bites in such localities were the only residents who did not have to dose themselves with quinine. They had no malaria.

How to Stamp Out the Pest.

It is recognised as an impossibility to exterminate the species of germ-carrying mosquitoes, but it is possible for communities to stamp out these diseases, as is shown by these conclusions of Dr. J. M. Young, of Hong Kong, China, probably the greatest living authority on the subject. He is speaking of the malaria-breeding anopheles mosquito, but the rule holds good with the yellow fever pest:

"That wherever malaria existed there were anopheles breeding pools in the immediate neighborhood.

"That wherever anopheles existed in the neighborhood of houses there malaria abounded.

"That in no case were the breeding pools further than 150 yards from the infected houses.

"That the breeding pools were easily located and drained.

"That the only effectual steps consisted in clearing away all shrubs, grass, etc., in order to drive away the adult female mosquitos, and then draining their breeding pools."

These are conclusions upon w

How the Mosquito Spreads Yellow Fever.

Stage 1. The mosquito (Stegomyia fasciata species), with a natural craving for fever-impregnated blood, bites a yellow fever victim and absorbs one or more germs of the disease.

Stage 2. For twelve days the yellow fever germs rest in the mosquito's stomach, undergoing a gradual process of multiplication and development.

Stage 3. At the end of the twelfth day the germs migrate in slow procession from the stomach to the salivary glands and from there to the very tip of the mosquito's biting organ seeking an avenue of escape.

Stage 4. The mosquito, thrusting its biting organ into the flesh of a human at feeding time, allows one or two yellow fever germs to escape into the human blood vessel from which the mosquito is drawing blood.

Stage 5. Each liberated yellow fever germ, the moment it finds itself deposited in a human blood vessel, begins to exude a deadly toxin or poison. It also goes through a process of development and shortly becomes the parent of a colony of minute yellow fever germs, which migrate from blood vessel to blood vessel, until they are finally distributed throughout the system.

Stage 6. The offspring germs, developing and becoming parent germs in their turn, give off an ever-increasing supply of the deadly toxin, so that the human victim, gradually succumbing to its baneful effects, falls ill.

Stage 7. The final stage. The blood of the human victim becomes so impregnated with the yellow fever germs and their exuded toxin that he develops a case of yellow fever in its most pronounced form. If, while in this condition, he is bitten by a Stegomyia mosquito, the mosquito will absorb several of the yellow fever germs, which will be ejected later into the blood of other human beings.

The epidemic of 1848 was slight, owing probably to the fact that it succeeded the severe epidemic of 1847, to which was due a great number of immunes.

The population of New Orleans by the United States Census was 130,565 in 1850, 168,675 in 1860, 191,418 in 1870, 216,090 in 1880 and 287,104 in 1900.

A Race Against Time.

This table, known to the physicians, struck terror into the hearts of those who saw the first types of virulent yellow fever that were discovered. Then determination followed fear, and after the public announcement was made of the disease every factor and element in the city's life buckled down to the hardest sort of work to prove that the disease could be and would be stamped out.

Now it is a race against time—and the mosquito.

To have the mosquito theory upheld, the disease must be stamped out before frost falls. Frost kills the mosquito, or drives her into hibernation, where she is harmless.

There have thus far been three stages to the fight against the disease. The third is just beginning.

There have been three phases of the battle—each one presenting a separate and distinct picture of the work to scotch and kill the disease.

These were the first phases: First, the efforts of the local Board of Health, after discovering the infection in the Italian quarter, to stamp out the terror without giving it that publicity which bitter experience had taught would result in commerce-throttling quarantine.

This failed.

Second, the united efforts, though somewhat misdirected and scattered, of the local boards, acting with the assistance of the volunteer ward organizations, and with the advice, sometimes received and sometimes rejected, of the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service officers here for the Federal Government.

This failed.

Third, the work of the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, with the co-optation of the State and city boards of health, and with the earnest support of the citizens of the city working through the various ward organizations, the Citizens' Advisory Committee and the Citizens' Financial Aid Committee.

This—so say the United States Government and the people of the city of New Orleans—will not fail.

On its success hangs the future independence of the city from fear of the strangle hold of quarantine. This, because the business men of the city have had their eyes opened, and have pledged themselves that hereafter New Orleans would adopt the modern scientific measures to render the spread of fever impossible, and will exercise the vigilance that Havana uses constantly and with the success that the world knows.

The bitterest pill of the many evil potions administered to the city during the recent and now existent scare, is that of the Havana quarantine, which, reversing the history of two hundred years, brings shame to every American cheek.

The Three Phases of the Work.

In the epidemic there are three phases of the fight against the mosquito disease. The first is the system of inspection and discovery of the sick amid the ignorant, alien population of Italians, Portuguese and Filipinos about the French Market and in the districts where they scattered from the infection.

To be considered with this is the system of emergency disinfection, the taking of the patients to the emergency hospital, and the taking of precautionary measures in infected premises, both as against the people and the houses. Surgeon Farrar Richardson, assisted by Surgeon J. P. Berry, handles this at present.

The second phase is the general sanitation work throughout the city, irrespective of the infected areas. This is concerned with the oiling of all water receptacles, the cleansing and oiling of all gutters; the screening of all cisterns, and the elimination of every possible breeding place for the stegomyia fasciata, which can alone convey infection from person to person.

The third phase is the quarantine regulations which exist to ot the bringing of further infection to New Orleans, and to prevent the carrying of infection to points outside the city. In this phase are found the detention camps, the fumigation squads that disinfect the freight and passenger cars, the shuttle trains that run from the city to the detention camps outside. Surgeon J. W. Guibras is in charge of this, with Surgeon Cerpui working with him.

The system whereunder this work is done has now been perfected under the Marine Hospital Service, with Surgeon J. H. White in charge.

This is the system under which the work is done: The city is divided into districts—seventeen of them—each with a district headquarters and a commissioned officer of the service in charge. Under this commanding officer are a corps of physicians. These do the inspection for cases of sickness and supervise the disinfection. Then there are squads under foremen, squads for oiling, squads for screening, squads for the return visitation of the fumigation in infected premises, squads to oil gutters, etc., and squads to follow the physicians into houses of sickness with mosquito bars and screens. Through these district commanders is reported to the city headquarters every case of sickness found, the number of infected localities, the number of persons held in detention for five days after being found in an infected locality.

The Battle Line.

These men are the skirmishers and the advance guard on the war upon the stegomyia. Behind them come the citizens' ward squads, under volunteer physicians, with workmen paid from the citizens' fund. Gutters are cleaned, oiled, lime placed on the matter dug out. Cisterns are screened. Water barrels are emptied. Tin cans are knocked in the bottom. Sinks and cesspools are lined and oiled. Practically all the prominent men of the city are doing active work in this.

Behind these are to come the forces of the city, enforcing the city ordinance just passed, making it obligatory on every house-owner to permanently screen every standing water receptacle on his premises.

Thus the work is going. The people are aroused. It is as though a deadly enemy was in the midst of the city that the people were to drive out.

"Stop thinking about this affair as a disease. Think about it simply as a pest of poisonous mosquitoes that have swarmed in among us. Kill the mosquito; if you can't kill him dodge him. If you can't dodge him, keep away from any more after you are bitten and keep the disease from being carried on to others.

"The stegomyia is a vampire in miniature. He is equipped with a lance, with which he slits the skin. Then he injects his pumping proboscis and squirts his native acid into your flesh to bring your blood to the surface that he may suck it. If he has the fever virus on his proboscis it is left in your blood, and you become infected, the disease coming to evidence within five days. From the time the mosquito fever appears on you, for three days, the germs within you are incubating, and if a mosquito bites you during that period that mosquito is infected. It takes the germs in the mosquito that bites you from eight to twelve days to incubate, and after that time the mosquito may give the disease to any one she bites until her laying time comes, which may be from five to fifteen days afterward.

"Suppose this mosquito was as big as a bat—wounding all with a stroke of a dagger instead of the stroke of a needle—wouldn't the people exterminate the reptile without any delay? However, the reptile in this case is tiny, hard to see, mysterious in its habitat—and the people forget about it until it bites them."

Now the people have been forced to remember.

New Orleans is a city of cisterns. It is a city of open gutters. In the poorer city it is a city of rain barrels. The stegomyia has found it a home unparalleled.

Now his home is being taken away. Through the poorer sections, and through the richer sections, and through the richest sections—squads are going, breaking their way where people object, climbing in where people are away—screening cisterns everywhere.

Nor class, nor rank, nor place, nor prejudice holds against the rule. Physicians have been jailed for refusing to submit to what they declared they believed to be absurd. Prominent politicians, whose henchmen would have died for them, have been thrown aside as a future negligible quantity in the community for standing against the rules of the time.

The screening and the oiling is the permanent work outside the infected district as well as within.

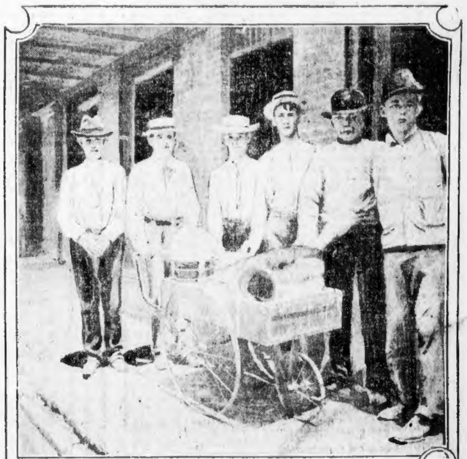
Where disease is found every room is cleared of mosquitoes by burning sulphur fumes, by scalding steam driven from an old fire engine, by burning insect powder. In the infected districts every room of every house in every block is fumigated and re-fumigated once every week after the discovery of infection, until such time as the area is declared free, or within thirty days after the last case of fever therein.

All freight cars leaving the city for points in nearby and quarantining States are entered by squads of men paid by the railroad companies, but supervised by a Marine Hospital man and thoroughly cleared of mosquitoes before receiving freight. All passenger cars are treated the same way. At every freight depot in New Orleans long lines of cars, emitting blue fumes from the burning sulphur, can be seen all day long. From three to four hundred cars of freight are thus cared for and sent out each day.

At all the passenger depots, prior to the departure of every train, the windows are all shut and sulphur fumes burned within.

Away back in the rear of the city the canals and pools and basin are covered with a film of oil. The streets where as yet no houses are have been cleared of grass, and the pools of water limed or oiled.

Everywhere the effort is to kill all mosquitoes that are infected.



All the cisterns in the yellow fever-stricken district are being screened in to keep the mosquitoes from breeding there.

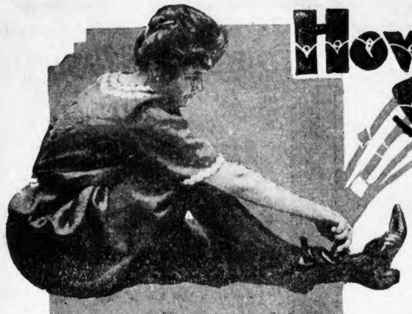
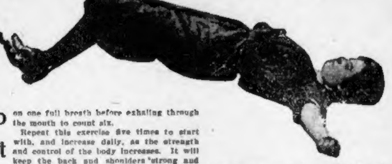
HOW TO RETAIN THE BENEFIT OF YOUR SUMMER VACATION



Exercise No. 2—The Start—Stretch the Leg Outward and Upward, Gripping It Firmly by the Toe.



Exercise No. 8—Raise the Rigid Body as High from the Floor as Your Strength Will Permit.

DON'T Permit Yourself to Slip Back Into the Old Lazy Rut, Says Miss Dullere, but Keep on with Your Regular Out-of-Door Exercising After Your Return Home.

By Miss May Dullere, Physical Culture Expert.

THE average woman returns from a Summer vacation feeling exhilarated and strong by reason of the complete change she has had, together with the fact that she has spent most of her time in the open air, taking an unusual amount of exercise, which at home is seldom thought of.

Upon her arrival she boasts of a few pounds gain in weight, and expresses a hope that she will retain the good she has derived from her vacation; but she immediately proceeds to get right back into the same old lazy rut that she was in before she went away, and slowly but surely she drops the few pounds she has gained, perhaps within a fortnight.

It never occurs to her that it was the exercising that helped to put it on, and that continued exercising will not only help her to keep it on, but will add more and more to her strength and general good health every day, provided it is taken properly and judiciously.

She fails to realize that while she was away she lived quite a different life from that at home. She romped about, perhaps climbing mountains and hills, rowing, bowling, swimming, playing tennis, and doing numerous things that she never thinks of doing only when away on her two or three weeks' vacation.

The up-to-date woman who would retain her youth, strength and beauty, will look about for some means of continuing the good work at home, and she will find it in physical exercising, which will not only keep her strong and robust, but will aid her digestion and circulation, which form the foundation for a clear complexion and generally strong constitution.

They should be taken the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night, in a well ventilated room, having the windows lowered from the top and raised from the bottom. The patient should remove all of her clothing and don a loose gown, giving the muscles perfect freedom.

She should never omit drinking her glass of cold water both before and after exercising, and care should be taken not to lie in a draught when exercising upon the floor.

EXERCISE NO. 1.

Stand erect, with shoulders drawn backward and downward, chest well up, and chin slightly raised; arms extended their fullest length at right angles with the body, on a level with the shoulders; cross the feet, placing the right one on the left side a distance of twelve inches apart, holding the body firmly with a slight curve at the waist line.

Inhale through the nose, counting seven, and while holding the breath for four counts, and with muscles tense, swing the entire body around to the right as far as possible and back to the original position, at which point relax and exhale through the mouth, counting six. Now inhale again, immediately counting seven, and while holding again for four counts swing the body to the left as far around as possible and return to the original position as before.

Repeat this exercise five times in each direction to start with and increase one daily for seven mornings, at which time the patient should be able to combine the two, making the swing from right to left, and back, to the upright position, while holding one long breath.

EXERCISE NO. 2.

Sit erect on the floor with knees slightly bent and arms down at the sides. Inhale through the nose, counting seven, drawing the air down to the very lowest lobes of the lungs, and then, while holding the breath for four counts, grip the right toe with the right hand and endeavor to pull the foot up from the floor as high as possible, allowing the left side to remain quietly relaxed. Pull outward and upward, endeavoring to straighten the leg at the knee. Now relax and drop the foot and hand back to the original positions, while exhaling through the mouth to count of six.

Inhale very deeply immediately and pull with left side in same manner, inhaling and holding the breath as before. Repeat the exercise three times with each side to start with, and increase one daily until the complete straightening out of each leg has been accomplished during the holding of one breath.

This will be found very difficult to do at first, but within a few days the sleeping muscles will wake up and the patient will be able to pull the rigid limb at least ten or twelve inches from the floor and at the same time will have accomplished wonders in giving a suppleness to her waist-line and an added breadth across the ribs directly under the shoulder blades.

EXERCISE NO. 3.

Sit on a strong chair or stool without a back, keeping the head and chest well raised, the shoulders drawn outward and downward. Inhale very deeply through the nose, counting seven, and while holding the breath for four counts reach upward and backward with the tip of the right toe, and grip it with the right hand, forming a backward turning circle of the body. Pull as hard as possible by means of the stretching of the muscles in the leg.

Now relax and drop the foot back to the floor while expelling every particle of air from the lungs through the mouth. Inhale again immediately, counting seven, and repeat this movement with the opposite side, holding and pulling as before.

It will do much toward rounding up a hollow and fallen chest, but strict attention must be given to the breathing and the counting in order to get the full benefits from the exercise.

Pull three or four times on each to commence with, and increase daily as the strength is gained, as in others.

EXERCISE NO. 4.

Get down on the floor on all fours and walk about like an animal while counting fifty, keeping the legs rigid at the knees and the hips raised as high as possible, with the hands and feet close to each other on the floor.

Inhale and exhale as directed in above exercises, but endeavor to hold the breath from four to six counts without expelling. For gaining power of endurance there is no better exercise.

This exercise may be done both night and morning, and while it sounds very simple, the patient will find it most difficult to do without bending the leg at the knee, and it can only be accomplished by faithful practice.

The patient need have no anxiety about any slight lameness in the legs, as it is only caused by bringing into play the unused muscles, and she will wear it all away in two or three days.

EXERCISE NO. 5.

Get down on the floor on the knees and hands, keeping them closely together, but reaching the extreme length of the arms away from the knees, or as far as the reach will permit.

Now inhale through the nose, counting seven, and, while holding the breath for four counts, swing the body as far forward as possible (bracing by the hands), then backward as far as possible (bracing by the knees).

It will not be possible for the patient to swing more than one complete length while holding for four counts, but she must endeavor to accomplish at least one swing on one full breath before exhaling through the mouth to count six.

Repeat this exercise five times to start with, and increase daily, as the strength and control of the body increases. It will keep the back and shoulders strong and firm, and will put flesh on the biceps.

EXERCISE NO. 6.

Stand erect, with feet close together, arms extended their fullest length at the sides, with fists firmly clenched, head up and chest well raised. Inhale through the nose, counting seven, and immediately drop the head and trunk as far forward and downward as possible, and, while holding the breath for four counts, raise the rigid arms straight upward and backward as far as the reach will permit.

At this point exhale through the mouth, counting six. Inhale again immediately, counting seven, and, while holding the breath for four counts, raise the head and trunk slowly upward to the original upright position, allowing the rigid arms to sweep downward, then forward and upward until at the finish of the exercise they are extended high over the head in mid-air, at which point slowly exhale through the mouth to count of six.

This exercise may only be done four times to start with, and may be increased daily as strength of endurance is gained until ten has been reached.

EXERCISE NO. 7.

Stand erect with hands down at the sides, palms turning backward. Inhale through the nose, counting seven, and, while holding the breath for four counts, raise the rigid arms to a level with the shoulders (palms still turning backward).

At this point expel the air forcibly from the very depths of the lungs and drop the arms downward and backward until they cross each other at the back, behind the thighs. Now inhale again immediately, and, while holding the breath for four counts, bring the rigid arms forward and upward again to their original position on a level with the shoulders.

Repeat this exercise five times daily, and increase as in others until ten has been reached. It will square up shoulders that are inclined to drop forward from constant sitting at a desk or in cases where the patient is given to sitting in a lolling, lazy position from over-fatigue.

EXERCISE NO. 8.

Lie full length on the floor with heels together, hands limp at the sides, palms turning downward. Inhale through the nose, counting seven, and while holding the breath for four counts raise the rigid body from the floor as high as possible (forming a semi-circle), braced only by the heels and shoulders, which are held firmly on the floor. Now relax, and drop gently back to the floor while exhaling through the mouth to the count of six.

Repeat this exercise four times to start with, and increase the count daily until able to lift the body from the floor and fall gently back without any apparent effort ten times.

For gaining absolute control of the body this exercise shows quick results and lasting ones. No woman can appear to good advantage or hope to be considered either stylish or graceful without having perfect control of her body from the ground up.

EXERCISE NO. 9.

Lie on the floor in recumbent position. Now bend the knees, bringing the feet up close to the end of the trunk. Inhale through the nose, counting seven, and while holding the breath for four counts raise the body straight upward from the floor, forming a horizontal line from the head to the points of the knees, braced only by hands and feet, which remain firmly on the floor.

The body is raised by means of the muscles of the hips and the arms. At this point walk around on hands and feet, first forward and then backward, like an animal; relax and drop back to the floor while exhaling through the mouth to the count of six.

Repeat this exercise for four times to start with, increasing daily as in others. It will keep the muscles of the arms and legs in fine, strong condition, at the same time giving them a graceful contour.

EXERCISE NO. 10.

Assume same position as described in exercise No. 9. This time instead of walking on all fours keep the body firmly braced and while holding the breath for four counts raise the rigid right leg straight up to a level with the rest of the body, bracing it by the left foot and both hands, which still retain their original position on the floor.

Now relax and while bringing the right foot down again to the floor beside the left one, exhale through the mouth to the count of six.

Inhale again immediately and repeat as before with the opposite side, inhaling and exhaling in the same manner. This exercise may be tried four or five times with each foot, increasing the count daily as in other exercises.

They will be found excellent in freshening up the circulation and keeping the digestive organs in good condition.

What a Consumptive Must Never Forget.

CONSUMPTION is curable, but not in the same way as acute rheumatism or diphtheria. At least a year of constant watchfulness is necessary after a patient has left the sanitarium apparently in robust health. "If curable, why not cured?" is often asked by people who see their friends relapsing after apparent cures, or by those who are disappointed to find themselves suffering again from symptoms they had imagined to be gone for good. It is with somewhat disheartened feelings they return to the haven of the sanatorium which they quitted some time before, looking so plump and rosy, and feeling so extraordinarily fit.

The real truth was summed up years ago by Laennac, who said: "The cure of tubercular phthisis is possible to nature; it is not yet so to medicine." What sanatorium treatment does is to put the consumptive in the position which allows nature to do her best for him, a remedy which sounds simple enough, but has wanted a great deal of finding out. The sanatorium physician fights the disease indirectly; he helps the consumptive to cure himself by improving his general health and increasing his powers of resistance. The comment of a university oarsman, one of the best rowing coaches of the present day, who happened to see a good deal of sanatorium life, was that the treatment appeared to be much the same as the training for a 'varsity boat race. And so it is, the aim in both cases being the same, namely: that of attaining the highest possible degree of physical efficiency.

The question remains, then, hardly so much how far can the sanatorium physician cure tuberculosis as to what extent, under favorable conditions, is the disease curable by nature.

Nature undertakes the repair of the injured lung in many different ways, and much of the welfare of the patient depends on the exact process by which the arrest of the disease is brought about. Sometimes a case, or envelope, to use a homely expression, will gather round the infected spot, or patch, upon the lung and thoroughly enclose it so that the destructive microbe is effectually imprisoned, the wound heals, the scars harden, and fever and other distressing symptoms disappear. The disease is, in fact, arrested, and at one time the patient would have considered himself to be perfectly cured.

So he is, for the time, but for a considerable period (how long is not, and cannot be ascertained) the microbe that is imprisoned is still capable of fresh mischief, should the walls that keep him in break down, when reinfection would almost certainly take place. If the patient is careful to maintain his general health and good condition, even in serious cases the disease may remain quiescent almost indefinitely, but should he return to a manner of life that lowers his general strength and vitality, or indulge in violent muscular exertion, such as lifting heavy weights or taking a full golf-swing, there is a risk of the scars breaking down. The writer has known one "arrested" soon after returning home to join a knot of athletes at a "tug-of-war," and another to go in for a swimming match. The dangerous part of it is they felt well enough to do it. In both cases results were disastrous.

Slight cases of consumption, that is, those in which disease is arrested at a very early stage, are certainly curable. We see examples of it constantly, but even in these cases the truest wisdom is to act as carefully as if they were the worst. In the case of young girls, avoiding the late hours of a social season and the choking dust of bazaars and ballrooms, and for men all overfatigue, unwholesome food, and wear and tear. Every successive year of immunity from relapse strengthens the claim of the consumptive to consider himself absolutely cured.

It is here the ideal health conditions of the sanatorium come in so usefully. There is no irksomeness in doing as every one else is doing, and no one to grumble at open windows in cold weather, which the hardy and well-trained consumptive patient really enjoys.

GOWNS of the SMART SET WORN AT NEWPORT

BY MRS. OSBORN,
Creator of Fashions for the Fashionable Women of America.

THE Newport tennis tournaments, and especially the national lawn tennis championship, attract some of the smartest crowds to be found at any Summer colony, and it is noticeable the women wear the prettiest gowns that sartorial art can create.

These gowns show better than anything else could what the best of the late Summer fashions are and what will be worn during the last weeks of Summer and early in the Autumn.

One of the most attractive of these gowns, and illustrated in Figure A, is of black gauze, soft and sheer of quality and made with a full gathered skirt finished with a hem at the bottom. The surplice bodice is made to come to a point in the front and back over a lace yoke.

A puffed sleeve is made with a lace cuff, and a very broad, wavy band of lace is set around the middle of the skirt.

The contrast between the white lace and black gauze is very striking, and still more so is the smart little lace coat worn over the bodice and merely accentuating its clinging lines rather than concealing them.

This little jacket is cut square and hangs just over the waist line. It is of very open lace and has a small [illegible] coat collar coming to a point on each side. The front terminates in a little bow. Lace sleeves end in a wide ruffled effect below the elbow.

Late Summer Fashions at Newport.

The embroidered flounce in this case begins some distance above the knees and continues down, terminating in points which lap over the top of a broad band of solid embroidery, in colors, which form a strong contrast to the open embroidery of the flounce.

On the bottom of this band open embroidery comes up in points from the edge of the skirt. The introduction of color is not necessary in this gown, but it is very effective and attractive.

Raised embroidery is the material employed in making the bodice of this gown. It is drawn over a fitted lining and finished with a pointed front and a stock and chemisette of lace.

Charming effects in blue and white, pink and white and green, or mauve and white can be arranged in this manner, and the gown would also be very pretty in all white.

A Soft, Dainty Batiste Gown.

Batiste makes a soft, dainty gown for Summer. This is the material employed in making the gown shown in Figure C. It is made with a full skirt, and this is trimmed with five inserted bands of open embroidery, set around the skirt their own width apart.

These bands are made more effective by having scalloped edges, and they are put on in graduated sizes, becoming wider toward the bottom. The first row of inserting is so near the top that it passes below the line of the belt in front, and the last row is set just above the hem. About the waist is worn a wide sash of pompadour ribbon with long ends.

The bodice is fulled on a square yoke of embroidery, similar to that which forms the bands around the skirt, and this is attached to a small yoke of transparent material, such as lace, beaded gauze or net or some very sheer material embroidered. The yoke and stock may be made of any of these materials.

The outline of the embroidered band around the yoke is wavy, almost to a scallop, and one of these scallops comes over the top of the sleeve. A similar band of embroidery is set around the middle of the gathered bodice and furnishes all the elaboration which it could require.

The sleeve carries out the prevailing fashion of a small puff confined to a fitted band at the elbow. Its lower portion is trimmed with an inserted band of embroidery and a small cuff with a frilled edge finishes the sleeve.

A smart gown, shown in figure D, is of fine but somewhat heavy linen, made with a medium long and fitted coat. Around the back of the neck and down the front the coat is elaborated with heavy raised embroidery, which grows more elaborate as it nears the bottom.

There is a narrow rolling collar in the neck of the coat, and it is further embellished with little bolero jacket fronts. The fronts have two over-lapping knife-pleated ruffles on the edges, lying upon a shirt front finished with two little black bows at the top.

A circular skirt completes this costume. At the bottom it is trimmed with a band of embroidery above two folds, and above the band, at intervals, are large appliques of embroidery. These are also placed in alternate intervals upon the bottom folds of the skirt.

Folds upon skirts are becoming more and more popular as their graceful harmony is understood. They supply the one-color trimming so much in demand.

Another trimming which is becoming more used is that of knife-pleated bands and ruffles. The knife-pleating is close and the bands vary in width and are edged with a line or band of some other material, such as the dress goods or embroidery or even lace, according to the fabric upon which the decoration is used.

There is a good deal of talk about the revival of the hoop skirt, but I do not think that good courturiers take the matter seriously. One indication that they do not lies in the fact that so many gowns for late Summer and early Autumn wear are made in Princess style, and cut quite inimical to the hoop skirt. American women, anyhow, are not such blind followers of fashion as to adopt a fad that is neither practical nor becoming, nor graceful. Every fad must have something to recommend it in feminine eyes, and the hoop skirt has nothing. Even the thin woman does not pine to hide her angularities in this manner.

The fashion of elaborating panels and fancy effects upon skirts and loading them with trimming, generally, is followed by some people in some classes of gowns, such as calling, dinner and evening gowns, but the much-trimmed skirt is not as smart as the simple one, and not nearly as becoming.

There is a species of garniture, however, which merges so successfully into the fabric of the skirt as to seem part of it and not in any way take away from the graceful lines of the figure.

Stripes Coming Into Vogue.

Now that stripes are coming more and more into vogue an old-fashioned method of trimming stripes with folds of plain material is to be seen. This style of trimming has to be carefully handled, as few gowns can be successfully trimmed in this manner.

Plain folds on a stripe can add to or detract from the appearance of a gown more than almost any other sort of trimming.

Gowns of all-over embroidery are fashionable for late Summer days and Newport has seen a great number of them. With their delicate tracery of embroidery and lace upon the sheerest lawns and mulls and batistes, they are dainty in the extreme, and they have just enough lace in them to give an attractive finish.

Such gowns are much more practical than they look. They cannot fade in the laundry, and they clean beautifully and always look new and fresh whenever so renovated.

It is noticeable that small hats have almost quite supplanted large ones in Newport, and these are made up in marked contrast to the hats worn last season. Simplicity is the keynote of this season's hats, while elaboration was the theme of those worn last year.

The fashion for having dress accessories match gowns has never been more evident than at the Newport tennis tournaments. Some of the shoes have been exquisitely embroidered to match the gowns with which they were worn, such as white and blue and white and pink combinations, and shoes of the exact color and sometimes the exact material of the dress.

Of course hosiery is made to harmonize perfectly with these shoes and gowns and a last touch of dainty perfection is given a gown in which the gloves, hosiery, shoes, hat trimmings and lingerie ribbons all contribute to the general color scheme.

If this fad is an expensive one, it is also one of the most beautiful in which women have ever rejoiced, and such a costume gives a flower-like appearance to a woman, for nature is the most careful of artists and blends her colors to perfection, so that beauty, grace and harmony are invariably achieved.

Bright Colors Noticeable at Newport.

Bright colors were as noticeable among the Newport gowns as was white; indeed, this has been a season of bright colors. Peachblow tints, greens of many shades, pinks, all sorts of lovely blues and mauves and other hues have mingled to make fashionable women look, in a crowd, like a garden of Summer flowers in full bloom, with enough white mingling to set off more distinctly the richness and prettiness of the bright colored gowns.

Abroad a great deal of black is being worn, but, so far, the fad has not touched us. It is too sombre a color ever to be a prevailing fashion—which it has been—and women should consider that, although black is a useful and economical color, it is depressing in its effects upon others, and nearly always trying to the complexion.

Women who want to dress very quietly and inconspicuously can always find enough soft, dull colors to gown themselves in without appearing in weeds. I am even opposed to black as mourning, and advocate black and white or all white for that purpose.

A good many women have taken the initiative in this respect and now wear white, instead of black, as deep mourning and, when the latter must be worn to observe conventions, they doff it as soon as possible.

The days of long veils and long periods of mourning are past, so far as garments are concerned. The world has become more sensible and people more willing to appear in a manner that will contribute best to the enjoyment of those around them.

The lack of black in Newport is as good an indication as one could desire of the decreasing interest in it as a dress color.

It never will be dropped in our generation and we can only hope that American women will continue, in the months to come, to be as sensible as they are now and not take up a fad which probably has its origin abroad in the losses sustained by royal families in Europe.

How to Improve the Beauty of Plain Babies.

THE thoughtful mother, by a little care now and then during the Summer, can remedy and prevent the greater part of what are known as natural defects in her child.

For instance, there is no need, surgeons say, that a child should grow up with a turn-up or tip-tilted nose, no matter what sort of an organ nature gave him.

What is, indeed, a dear little nose on the baby will present an unfinished, chipped off appearance when the child is grown up, and its owner would give much to add a little to the end and banish the tip-tilted effect.

If such a nose during babyhood is gently pulled and stroked between the fingers, after the bath and several times daily, it will be but a short time until a change for the better will be seen both in length and shape. Noses broken in infancy can also be corrected in shape when they fail to set properly. In this case, however, the advice of a doctor should be obtained as to the condition of the bony structure.

Great things can be done with the hands also. Short, stubby fingers can be quite rapidly changed to the tapering kind by gently compressing and stroking them toward the ends. There are actually thimbles on the market made to achieve the same result by squeezing the finger tips into them. When the nails are short and broad the skin should always be kept pushed back from the base of the nail, leaving the "half moon" exposed, as this adds to the seeming length and narrowness of the nail.

A simple and very efficacious remedy for keeping the hands white is a mixture of two parts of glycerine to one part of rose water, with a few drops of tincture of benzoin added. This should be spread on the hands at night and rubbed in.

Wayward ears are looked upon by many as a necessary evil. And so they are in later life, but the adult who has overhanging or outstanding organs of hearing can, without any doubt, thank his parents for them.

Many mothers tuck their children's ears into their bonnets doubled over, and in that way ears that would naturally have laid close to the head are trained to protrude till they look like the ears of Midas.

A bandage placed not too tightly around the head at night will overcome the evil tendencies of even the most wayward of ears, without affecting either the health or comfort of the little one.

Some babies have a cute little habit of pulling their ears, much to the merriment of their parents. This habit must be corrected or misshapen organs will certainly result.

The care of the hair is not the least of these important little things. Often the hair grows too low about the temples and forehead. Whenever this is the case, if brushed well back against the direction of its invasion, it will soon begin to retire in the line of the brushing. The nape of the neck should be watched carefully and kept free from hair.

The tooth brush should make its appearance as soon as the line of discoloration appears over the upper teeth. The dentist should be consulted at least twice a year. A little pain and expense is repaid many times over in ease and looks of later life.

What You Should Do at the "Leather Wedding."

BY MRS. LINDA HULL LARNED,

Author of the "Hostess of To-day."

THERE is a conflict of opinion regarding the leather wedding. Some authorities assert that it should be celebrated the third year and others the fourth year after marriage, while many do not mention it at all, so if the hostess is eager for an excuse to do something she may entertain on either the third or fourth anniversary and call it the leather wedding. Or, if she be otherwise engaged, she may pass on to the fifth year, when everybody knows that it must be a wooden wedding or nothing.

The leather wedding is not as formidable as it sounds at first hearing. But as it is impossible to trim the house with leather and have it distinguishable from leather furnishings that already belong there, perhaps it would be better for the hostess to make of this event a supper for twelve so that the leather idea need only prevail at the table. It should be a hot supper, too, for in order to carry out the idea the food should be brown, although not necessarily "leathery."

Invitations on Leather.

If the invitations to this function are but few, it will pay for the trouble to paint them in gilt lettering on tiny squares of leather, or on paper in imitation of leather, which it is possible to secure.

The two dates—the real wedding and its anniversary—together with name of host and hostess, and date, are necessary for this "bid" to come, so it would be a simple task to print or paint the five that are to go to the other couples, for in this case a man and his wife count one.

This printing and painting may be accomplished with the bronzing fluid and gold dust that can be bought in almost every city and town. This same method could be used for the place cards, which should also be of leather. But here one must make twelve of them, for in all practical purposes man and wife are two.

Now that the guests are invited and seated, let us turn our attention to the table, as neither home nor costumes are expected to be in the least "leathery."

A bare table of polished wood with centrepiece and doilies of chamois skin in the natural color would be the most artistic background for our brown supper, but if the table is not presentable in its bareness, then a white cloth may be used with a centrepiece of imitation leather.

I have one now which I have used for many years on a tabourette under a jardiniere, and it is only a thick paper disk in imitation of brown leather, embossed in red and gold.

If the chamois skin and bare table be possible, then the centrepiece should be left in its natural shape with its uneven edges, while the plate doilies may be "haggled" to match. The use of these would not be a serious extravagance, because they—even the smallest of doilies, those used under bonbon dishes—come in handy afterward for many household purposes.

The next query is concerning the flower decoration and what shall hold them. It must be something of leather because the centre table decoration is always the keynote of the situation. A leather travelling bag, filled with field daisies and ferns, has been suggested.

Ferns in Leather Baskets.

This would, indeed, be artistic, providing the bag was new and in buff or tan color, which would harmonize with our yellow chamois skin doilies. Some other writer suggests a basket of burnt leather filled with fr s, and we would suggest a hunt through the leather and trunk "emporiums" for something new and novel, and then fill this find with a climbing plant commonly called "Leather flower," otherwise known to the florists as "Clematis Viorna," which grows wild in Ohio and Pennsylvania and is often cultivated.

I would suggest that a gentleman's hat box without the cover would serve the purpose, especially as a tin pail could be put inside to be filled with water with which to keep the flowers fresh. Wild flowers wilt so quickly.

Another suggestion, although rather an incongruous idea, is to use kid slippers and fill them with nasturtium blossoms and lea s. Those heelless kid slippers in different colors, embroidered in gold and with tassels on their turned-up toes, would be just the thing. These are brought to this country by the Orientals, and cost but little.

In order to give them the desired tilt they could be arranged toes out around a bed of moss, with a central tree of the Japanese variety growing out of it, or perhaps a bunch of growing ferns. White kid slippers, the party kind, might be used and the mound be of uncooked rice, so as to give the nuptial air so necessary for a wedding anniversary.

White Kid for Decorations.

If the central decoration be of white, then the centre piece and doilies should be of white kid and the place cards of white kid also. These latter may be made of the arms of old kid gloves cut into oblong squares and stretched over pieces of cardboard. The edges may be buttonholed together, or finished with a gilt cord to match the gold painted name.

The menu should begin with brown consomme in brown leathery looking cups of china or earthenware. There are small, cheap ones that come for kitchen use. If our hostess feels that she can afford to b twelve leather cased drinking cups, these would fill the bill in place of the goblet for water.

Browned oysters and mushrooms or sweetbreads fried brown are suitable dishes and English muffins toasted brown are also suitable, as well as toothsome. A salad of chestnuts and walnuts together with brown bread sandwiches, and then a chocolate or coffee ice cream, brown cakes, and, of course, black coffee to finish with, which is always a beautiful brown. The bonbons should be of chocolate or leather colored, and the nuts a little browner than usual. Pecans are just the thing.

Souvenirs might be tiny suit cases and trunks in imitation leather. The trunks should be filled with bonbons and given to the women, while the dress suit cases could contain cigarettes for the men.

A shopping bag or variety case of leather would also be acceptable to the ladies instead of the trunk. They are more practical, as they are now quite the vogue. At least no lady appears without one in her hand or hung on her wrist, and quite pretty ones can be bought now for a song.

Just for fun, while lingering over the coffee cups, which this time should be served in the dining room, each benedict present might be asked to give a description of his wife's wedding gown, then each matron should be coerced into relating her honeymoon experiences. Some of these tales would be interesting and amusing if the guests happened to be a clever and observing lot.

I know one bride who received a black eye upon her wedding journey from the heel of her bridegroom's slipper. He was not beating her, but while dancing around the room in his exuberance of youth and joy his slipper flew off and the heel came in contact with her cheek bone. A revelation of their explanation to her "kin," with whom they dined that evening, made a most amusing story.

Presents for the Hostess.

Now for the selection of presents that these five couples will send to the bride. When a party is so small each couple sends something, of course, even if it be of but little value. There are so many beautiful things in leather that it becomes a difficult process to select those within one's means, or those that would be appropriate to the rest of the belongings of the happy pair who are to receive them.

"Paint the invitations in gilt lettering on tiny squares of leather."

Of course, when but one present is sent it is something for the hostess of the house, and is addressed to her, accompanied by the cards of the couple who send it, but both husband and wife may send gifts of intrinsic value to both hostess and host if the degree of intimacy warrants it.

The dress-suit case, travelling bag, golf bag, cuff and collar case are suitable gifts for him, while a shopping or travelling bag, a leather work-box, medicine case, drinking cup or card-case would be gladly received by her.

A leather pillow for the library sofa, a handsome leather chair, a leather pad-holder for the library writing desk, or leather mats for the library table are all suitable and useful presents to be sent to them both.

There are leather bridge boxes and prayer book covers, which seem congruous, nevertheless they are used by the same people. And there are leather fans and slippers and shawl straps and belts galore, and really a longer list to choose from than I am able to give here.

When I started this article I thought that the leather wedding would be a most barren subject, but you see, my dear "Hostess," that a little thought brings out many seeming possibilities, and now it appears that the leather anniversary may be as attractive and as much of a function as any of them. Therefore, it is really quite worth while to mark the third or fourth mile stone of the marriage road with a leather supper.

A Tiny Costumer.

China Stand, with Alcohol Lamp and Hot Water Bottle Bag.

Baby's Basket of Willow, Ribbons and Lace Trimmings.

IT is usually quite a serious problem to think of a present for the baby on the day he makes his first appearance, unless you give him baby clothes or blankets, of which you know he will get more than he needs. There are other things, however, inexpensive and much more easily made up at home.

For instance, there are safety pin boxes which will be put in use at once. Take six small cardboard boxes, all alike, and tie them together with a broad satin ribbon. Fill with six sizes of pins.

Another nice little thing to give is the straw rattle, obtainable in any toy shop. Tie it with a pretty pink or blue ribbon and rest assured it will be one of the first things upon which baby will exercise his fat fingers.

A small white costumer will please. This is a miniature hat rack, white enamelled, and of a height corresponding to an infant's stature.

The smallest and lightest coat hanger you can buy, covered with baby blue or baby pink silk and padded and perfumed, will please and fill a want.

Here is something which nobody else will think of. Buy the largest wooden spoon you can and decorate it with any design you think appropriate. Insert small brass hooks for baby's clothes. Tie an ornamental cord or a ribbon at one or both ends to hang it up by.

Another very useful present consists of a china stand and kettle for hot water, to be used with an alcohol lamp. It will be used, too, in the nursery every day.

A willow baby basket trimmed with ribbon and lace to hold baby's daily increasing personal property is a substantial and pleasing present which will remain long in use.

Some Useful Hints to Young Housewives.

IF palms are sponged occasionally with equal parts of milk and lukewarm water they will retain a healthy gloss.

Put a teaspoonful of ammonia in a quart of water, wash your brushes and combs in this, and all grease and dirt will disappear. Rinse, shake, and dry in the sun or by the fire.

Never rinse white lace in blue water under the impression that this will improve the color. Real lace should be finally rinsed in skim milk, which will give it the soft, creamy tint so much admired.

Coal should be kept in the dark. Its nature changes under the influence of strong light, especially under sunlight. It becomes friable, and is less able to give out a strong heat when burnt. When stored it should have salt sprinkled over it. This keeps it in condition, and prevents its undue drying.

To keep butter, fill a bowl with cold water. Put the butter on a plate and put on top of the bowl, then take a piece of butter muslin and put over the butter and let both ends drop into the water. You can easily get the butter for use, and you will find it is quite solid and cool.

When hanging out clothes to dry, stockings should be hung up from the toes; while flannels must be hung out at once, and be well shaken before hanging them. Nightdresses, etc., should be hung up from the shoulders. Do not drag any garment when pinning; allow it to hang easily.

Have the inside of the oven kept scrupulously clean. Wash the entire inside of the oven (not forgetting the roof) at least once a week. Remove the shelves and door before commencing operations, and scrape off any burnt substance with an old knife. Let the oven be kept open till quite dry and all smell of soap has passed off. A spoke brush kept for this purpose is very useful.

The best time to cut flowers to keep well is in the early morning before the sun's rays have reached them. A knife or a pair of scissors should always be used to clip them off, as they should be cut smooth and clean from the stem, and never broken off. Flowers that are not fully developed will keep the longest, but they should reach their maturity of color and size before being cut.

Lisle thread stockings should be washed in tepid water tinted with a little blue, and soap should only be used for the feet. Rinse in clear water, allowing a piece of ammonia the size of a bean to every gallon of water. Dry quickly in fresh air, but not in the sun. If this is impossible, roll up tightly and wring in a clean cloth, letting a fold of the cloth come between each fold of the stocking.

Here Are Several Choice and Tempting Dishes for a Fickle Appetite.

ONE of the most valuable accomplishments of the good housekeeper is her ability to prepare an infinity of little dishes which by their novelty and wholesomeness freshen jaded appetites. Here are some recipes that will serve that purpose:

Deviled Eggs.

Boil as many eggs as are required for ten minutes, put them in cold water, and when cold shell them. Cut in halves lengthways, remove the yolks, and rub them to a smooth paste with a tablespoonful of chopped tongue to six eggs, a dessertspoonful of salad oil, salt and cayenne to taste, a few drops of onion juice, and half a teaspoonful of French mustard. Cut a tiny slice off the bottom of each half of the white so that it will stand on the dish, fill with the prepared mixture, and serve, garnishing with watercress.

Almond Cakes.

Rub 2 oz. butter into 5 oz. flour, 5 oz. powdered lump sugar, beat an egg with half the sugar, then put it with the other ingredients. Add 1 oz. blanched almonds and a little almond flavor, roll them in your hand to the size of a nutmeg, and sprinkle with fine lump sugar. They should be lightly baked.

Shape of Prunes.

This is especially suitable for invalids and old people. Stone one and a half pounds of French prunes, put them in a stewpan, and cover them with cold water. Let them boil for about a minute, then strain off the water through a sieve. Pour a little cold water over the prunes, have ready a jelly made of half an ounce of gelatine, a pint of water, and three ounces of brown sugar. Season with almond, and boil for five minutes—then strain. Arrange the prunes in a casserole mould, pour in the jelly, and set it in a cool place to become firm. The hole in the centre of the mould may be filled with whipped cream.

Gateau Des Pommes.

One pound of sugar, one pint of water, two pounds apples, juice and peel of one large lemon. Boil the sugar in the pint of water till quite thick, then add the apples (pared and cored), the juice of the lemon and the peel (grated). Boil all together till quite stiff, then put it into a wet mould, and when cold turn it out, and serve it in a deep glass dish with custard round.

Genoese Pastry for Sandwich.

Take the weight of two eggs in the best pastry flour, castor sugar, and good fresh butter. Beat the butter to a cream, add the sugar and beat again; then break in the eggs, one at a time, beating all the time; lastly dredge in the flour, with which has been sifted a teaspoonful of baking powder. Some cooks prefer to make the pastry without the addition of powder, but in inexperienced hands it insures lightness. Line out two round tins of about 7 in. diameter with buttered paper; pour equal quantities of the mixture into each and bake in a moderate oven for about twenty minutes. When slightly cool slice them through with a sharp knife and spread one slice with lemon curd, or jam if preferred, and lay the other on the top. The other cake may be treated in the same way, or differently, according to taste, or one can be put on top of the other, with a layer of chocolate icing between.

Apple Plum Pudding.

Arrange in a deep earthen baking dish suitable for serving as many apples, cored and pared, as it will hold. Fill the core cavities with a mixture of equal parts of boiled chestnuts, stoned dates, seeded raisins and walnuts, all chopped fine and moistened with lemon juice and sweetened to taste. Melt sugar and butter in hot water in the proportion of one tablespoonful sugar, and one-half teaspoonful butter for each apple, and one cup hot water for five apples. Pour this over the apples and baste frequently, adding more water if needed. There should be just a little rich thick syrup at the last. Serve hot with thin cream or cold with whipped cream.

Stuffed Tomatoes.

Take a dozen tomatoes, cut a piece off the base or stalk end, and, with the handle of a spoon, carefully scoop out the seeds. Chop finely some boiled veal or chicken, mix with bread crumbs, the yolk of an egg, and season with pepper and salt. Fill the mixture into the tomatoes, and place them open end downwards in a buttered baking tin and cook slowly till done. Another stuffing may be made with rice. For the above number of tomatoes take six tablespoonfuls of rice, which should be boiled for ten minutes and washed with cold water. Melt two ounces of butter, add a little chopped onion, six or seven chopped mushrooms, and a little parsley, also salt and pepper, finally, add the rice and cook for a quarter of an hour. Fill the tomatoes and proceed as before.

Rhubarb Sponge.

Cut up a dozen sticks of rhubarb and stew them with half a pound of crushed loaf sugar; slice up four sponge cakes and line a small basin with them, then put a layer of rhubarb over, and arrange the remainder of the sponge cakes in layers with the rhubarb, cover with a saucer, and put in a cool place, then turn out on to a dish. Beat the whites of two eggs to a firm froth with two tablespoonfuls of castor sugar. Spread thickly all over the sponge, and bake in a cool oven long enough to set meringue. To be eaten cold.

Eggs in Aspic.

Rinse out some small dariole moulds with cold water, pour a little melted aspic jelly into each, and let it set. Next decorate the moulds prettily with either little shapes of truffle or sprigs of chervil, put a few drops of jelly on them to set the decoration. Shell the eggs and cut each into four lengthways; put a quarter in each mould (if there seems plenty of room put in two), fill the moulds with aspic jelly, and leave them till set. Then dip the moulds in tepid water and turn the jellies on to a dish. Arrange them in a circle with a circle of nice salad round.

Macaroni a la Sicilienne.

If possible use a pretty fire-proof dish for this. Butter the inside thickly with butter, then sprinkle in the parsley. The macaroni should be cut into inch lengths and cooked till tender in plenty of fast boiling salted water; it should then be drained well. Cut the meat into small cubes; on the parsley put a layer of cheese, then a layer of meat and seasoning, and so on till the dish is full, then pour in the sauce, and, lastly, put a layer of cheese on the top. Put the dish in the oven until the contents are hot through; the cheese should be nicely browned on top. Serve it at once. Any scraps of cold meat are excellent done this way.

The saddles to be presented with the horses are the very highest grade "Cross" London-made side-saddles—the handsomest product of the celebrated Mark Cross Company, headquarters of the fashionable set in both England and America for harness, saddlery and ultra-smart travelling and small leather goods.

They are of the very finest English pigskin, have the fashionable flat seat favored by the West End horsewomen of London and seen on all the bridle paths around New York, and are sanctioned by the hallmark of society. In the way of saddles nothing finer can be produced in the world.

Duplicates of them may be seen at the American establishments of the Mark Cross Company, at No. 210 Fifth avenue, and No. 253 Broadway, in New York, and No. 20 Summer street, Boston. Photographs of them are also to be seen at Roos Brothers' store in Kearney street, San Francisco, and at W. K. Cowen & Co.'s on Michigan Boulevard, in Chicago, who are the Western agents of the Mark Cross Company.

Appropriate Cross bridles to go with these saddles are part of the outfit, manufactured for this contest in the Cross Company's workshops in England. They contain every element of smartness that can be put into a bridle.

This interesting competition will remain open to all until the close of the Summer resorts next month. Send in your best photograph with your full name and address. Mail it to SADDLE HORSE PRIZE, care of this newspaper. We cannot promise to return the photographs.

LOST HEIRS.

It is estimated that there are something like 30,000 persons scattered throughout the U. S. who are entitled to moneys and lands now tied up in the English high court of chancery owing to the inability of lawyers to locate them. The great trouble is that English lawyers, when searching for lost heirs, almost invariably advertise for them in London or Edinburgh newspapers; as these papers are seldom seen in this country, of course the missing heir never knows of the good fortune that is awaiting him or her, and thus the case drags along in the courts for an indefinite time. As an aid to those interested in chancery cases, and who believe that they are entitled to an inheritance, an enterprising publisher has prepared an authentic list of persons who have been advertised for during the past 150 years, and includes the famous Anneka Jantses and Haarlem estates. The list is a very long one, and not only gives the full name of the heir that is being searched for, but also the name and address of the attorney having charge of the estate in chancery. Any person can secure details of this list by sending a 2-cent stamp to THE ROYAL REGISTER, 34 Madison square, N. Y. City.

CAPTAIN HARDIZAN

BY JULES VERNE

A THRILLING TRAGEDY-ROMANCE OF THE SAHARA

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

(Translated from the Original French and Edited by Oswald Mathew.)

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

CAPTAIN LEON HARDIZAN'S military expedition to Africa, under orders to report to the French Government on the scheme to flood a depressed portion of the Desert of Sahara and thus turn a waste of sand into a navigable sea, had strange experiences soon after its start from the port of Gabes in Algeria. The first of a series of episodes, made wonderful by [illegible], consisted, as told in previous chapters, of the abduction of a French girl, Marie Lauri, by Arabs under the direction of Djemma, a native priestess endowed with hypnotic power. Beyond that not extraordinary gift Djemma was a creature so abnormal with unexplained electrical permeation, so seemingly superhuman in mind and body, that it was no wonder her people paid homage to her as to a goddess. We shall see eventually the amazing source of this woman's witchery. Meanwhile we will follow her employment of it.

Those who read the account of the rescue of Marie Lauri from Hadjar's band of nomads by her lover, Captain Hardizan, and his troop of fifty cavalrymen, know that Djemma remained behind her son's fleeing party and purposely became a prisoner to the French. To Hadjar she had said that her own life and death depended on her regaining possession of Marie; but she made no definite explanation to him, and neither the girl nor Hardizan was aware of any such sinister or occult intention on the woman's part.

So the French expedition went on its way to the Oasis of Zenfig, taking along Djemma as a prisoner and Marie as a guest. This oasis was at the edge of a deep basin, and there a canal had been dug as a part of the plan to flood the sunken area. Paul de Schaller, the engineer of the party, expected to find a force of natives at work here under French superintendence; but, to his utter surprise, not a human being was to be seen. Moreover, the abandoned section of the canal had been partly filled in with sand and the machinery wrecked by malicious hands. This destruction had been wrought by Djemma's fanatical tribe of Touaregs, who had been taught by her and her son Hadjar, their chief, that the proposed inland sea meant not only the obliteration of much of the desert but the Arab hordes of bandits as well. Captain Hardizan questioned Djemma, but she professed ignorance of what had been done in her absence. The old witch Djemma manages to lure the main force of the troops away on a vain search for the canal workers whom they had failed to find at the Oasis of Zenfig. Under Lieutenant Viliette the troopers set out for Gizeb, twenty miles distant, under guidance of a treacherous Arab. They found no traces of the native workers or the French supervisors, and in returning to Captain Hardizan's camp were caught in a desert simoon of great violence.

CHAPTER VII.

Captured Again by the Wily Bedouins.

AFTER the departure of Lieutenant Viliette and the troop for Gizeb, Captain Hardizan and Engineer De Schaller began to arrange for a sojourn of the expedition at Zenfig. They had not thought of doubting Mizaki, and they fully expected that in the evening Pontar would be brought back to the works with a force of native laborers. There remained at Zenfig the Captain, the engineer, Mlle. Lauri and ten men. They busied themselves with preparing a camp—or at least selecting a site for it and doing some preliminary work at it. Truth to tell, though, that was done chiefly under the direction of De Schaller and not only because he was the engineer of the outfit, but also because Hardizan and Marie, being sweethearts, were disposed to stroll by themselves. So while the wagons were being brought and tents set up the lovers wandered to the edge of the oasis and gazed across the desert for signs of the returning troop.

Gusts of wind were already sweeping across the oasis, bending the trees and compelling the girl to cling to the man's arm to keep on her feet. They reached the tents barely in time to escape the terrifying roar of thunder and vivid flashes of lightning. All save Djemma took shelter at once, but the strange Arab woman stood forth boldly, as though deriving some weird sort of satisfaction from the electrical commotion. And again the phenomenon of effulgence came upon her. Her face, hands and feet once more diffused a perceptible radiance, and this time the exposed surfaces of her skin snapped sparks at each nearby stroke of lightning, as happens when one holds his hand close to an electric battery.

An hour later the tempest was at its height. The tents threatened to pull themselves loose from their pegs, which the men drove further into the ground, while they passed ropes over the canvas to hold it down. All was confusion. The horses plunged and neighed, but they had been securely tethered.

In view of the late hour, and the rage of the tempest, which would certainly last a part of the night, Hardizan no longer counted on the return of the troops till next day.

The Captain and his companions were therefore, gratified, as well as surprised, when they heard hoofbeats and voices outside, as though the troop had come. Hardizan and De Schaller ran out of the tent. But they saw no troop. Instead, they beheld the camp overwhelmed by a hundred Arabs, who seized the Captain, the engineer and the few remaining men before they could attempt the slightest defense.

Hardizan's first thought was of Marie. It flashed through his mind that, if she would but stay quietly in the tent, her presence might be overlooked. But he dared not try to warn her. For a moment he hoped she would be passed over and left behind to be possibly saved by the troop when it should return. These thoughts had hardly taken shape in his brain when he was suddenly made to know that they were futile.

Djemma stepped forth into view and ordered that Marie be brought out. Two Arabs darted into the tent to obey her. They dragged the girl out roughly. Djemma's first abduction of the French girl had been accomplished, as we know, by stealth rather than force—by recourse to the woman's hypnotic power. [illegible] there was no need of other than brute force. The sight of the delicate maid in the cruel grasp of the ruffians ma[illegible] Hardizan. He wrenched himself away [illegible] who had seized him, caught [illegible] hammer that chanced to [illegible] at his feet and struck down [illegible] sweetheart's captors—one after [illegible] with blows that crushed [illegible] eggshells and laid two corpses [illegible] ted ground.

But his impulsive bravery was of no avail. What could he or his [illegible] when [illegible] against the hundred who surprised [illegible]? They were [illegible] overcome. The Arabs had no [illegible] clear of the oasis before the [illegible] was heard, and a minute [illegible] throat bounded into the midst [illegible]. The fact was that the brave [illegible] on ahead of Viliette in the [illegible] come separated from the tr[illegible] hearing distance of the [illegible] joined it by mistake. [illegible] his friends instantly, even [illegible] especially Marie, with whom [illegible] pet, and he ran to her hor[illegible] delight. If the Arabs had kn[illegible] dog had killed Mizaki [illegible] have been slaughtered on [illegible] it was he was permitted to follow his friends.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Shocking Fate Reserved for Marie.

THE journey was continued through the night, but in what direction the prisoners could not know, for the sky showed no stars to judge by. At first the captives were kept separate. Djemma rode at the head of the column, and she kept Marie close beside her, as though determined that by no possible chance should she escape. After a distance which Hardizan estimated at about twenty miles had been covered, they came upon an Arab horseman, mounted and alone, awaiting them at a rock which no doubt had been fixed upon as the point to find him. Marie, who had seen Hadjar, chief of the Touaregs, and son of Djemma, when he was under her father's custody at the fortress of Gabes, at once recognized him in this man.

"My son," was Djemma's greeting, "Allah be with you."

"I bow before you, mother," Hadjar responded, and bent low over the pommel of his saddle, as though saluting a sovereign rather than a parent.

The two held a brief conference, and then the march was resumed. It was not until the first light of day indicated the hour, also that the storm was over, that Hard[illegible] and de Schaller contrived to get their horses abreast.

"What, think you," Hardizan asked, "does Hadjar mean to do with us?"

"My best surmise," de Schaller replied, "is that he will hold us as hostages. The Touaregs will resume their destructive raids on our canals. Now, with us in custody, if they are captured, they will bargain to release us if they are released."

"But Hadjar holds me in especial enmity, because it was I who led the foray that took him prisoner to Gabes, and so he will avenge himself on me personally, never doubt it. Ah, I know the Satanic cruelty, the hellish vindictiveness of these savages."

"Heaven forbid!" exclaimed de Schaller, with a shudder.

"I am not in a boastful mood," said the Captain, "but this I will tell you. It is for Marie that I care more than for myself. It is what they may do to her that horrifies me. What a dreadful fate they may doom her to because she is a beautiful young girl—what tortures they may inflict because she is my affianced wife!"

The two officers rode on in gloomy silence.

It was not Hadjar, chief of the Touaregs, but [illegible] their priestess, who knew [illegible] fate that was meant for Marie Lauri.

"Mother," Hadjar remarked, as they rode side by side at the head of the column, and he gave a backward glance of destroying admiration at the pale, weary, yet still beautiful girl, "what do you intend to do with her? Is she for me?"

Djemma gazed at him a moment in silence. Then she said:

"Hadjar, my son, listen and I will reveal to you what I have never before told any human being. I tell you now so that you may help me and not hinder me. At intervals of [illegible], as you know, I go down into a deep cavern beneath our altar at Pharsa and perform certain rites alone. No one else has ever descended to that subterranean temple since Aramadah, my predecessor in the priesthood, died and left its secret to me. The tribe has time and again seen me disappear weak and worn; it has as often seen me reappear empowered [illegible]."

"I have marvelled with the rest."

"'In that cavern beneath the altar is the Fire of Life. It burns without fuel, but with the lightning of a thousand storms. It is a flaming fountain. At each visit to it I receive a baptism of electric power."

"Great is Allah!"

"Great is Allah!" and the woman extended her arms reverentially toward the dawn in the East. Then she continued, slower than before, and with an awe which showed the reality of her superstitious belief in what she said: "There is a gift greater than all the others which I may receive if I deserve it—if I earn it. The priest Aramadah said to me, on his death couch, 'I would not need to die within a hundred years if I could but offer the sacrifice demanded by the Fire of Life. It is this, Djemma—and you may succeed where I have failed. A virgin must, through your will, yet of her own act, stand in that great fire of the lightnings until she is consumed.'" The woman paused and then concluded: "Your question is answered, Hadjar. Now you know what I mean to do with my prisoner."

CHAPTER IX.

Marie Finds an Unexpected Protector.

THE route by which the Arabs took their prisoners from Zenfig, the place of their capture, to Pharsa, the place of their confinement, ran for seventy miles by a way which none but a native could have travelled with any safety. The chief danger lay in the quicksands, traps into which the unwary strangers might be caught and held fast until they sank into graves that would become deeper and deeper. But Djemma's second son, Sohar, conducted the party by practicable paths. Three days were taken in the journey, with long rests during the hot portions of the day, at points where a spring and a clump of trees afforded shelter from the burning sun. The riding was done after the sun had gone down and before it had risen again.

Yet with this comparatively slow progress the heat and fatigue soon told on the woman and the girl of the party. Marie Lauri's strength waned so much that when the third and final day's march began she had to be lifted into her saddle and fastened there, while by her side rode Sohar and another Arab to sustain her if need be. Captain Hardizan was not permitted to go near her; and, indeed, all of the six men prisoners were kept apart from one another, so as to keep them from plotting an escape.

When within a few miles of Pharsa Captain Hardizan found his first opportunity to speak to Hadjar.

"Where are you going with us?" the Captain asked.

The Arab deigned no reply.

"What do you mean to do with us?"

No word of response was spoken.

"Why have you taken a harmless girl prisoner?"

Hadjar wheeled his horse away and rode awhile between his mother and Marie. He had no pity for the girl's evident suffering, but showed regret at the woman's worn condition.

"You are almost exhausted," he said.

"I shall be empowered anew at Pharsa," Djemma replied.

At that moment Marie slipped, fainting, from her saddle and hung just above the ground by the straps which had been meant to hold her in place. The frightened horse reared, plunged and threatened to crush her under his hoofs. Hardizan dashed for her, but two Arabs seized and held him. But there was a rescuer quick to act. That man was Sohar. Springing from his horse, he cut with a single stroke the strap by which Marie was dragged, caught her up in his arms and drew her away from danger. She had been harmed by no more than a bruise on her forehead.

The blow was sufficient, however, to render her wholly unconscious, and a halt was rendered necessary. Sohar laid her carefully, even tenderly, in a shade improvised by placing several pack-laden donkeys side by side. Then he brought a kidskin of water and was about to bathe her brow. But Djemma took his place, peremptorily, and herself revived the girl.

The Frenchmen were not permitted to approach her. But in the distraction of attention from them Captain Hardizan and Engineer de Schaller contrived to get together for the first exchange of a word since the start from Zenfig.

"Djemma keeps up her personal charge of Marie," said the captain.

"It has been so all along, as you must have seen," the engineer answered.

"And have you noted, too, that Sohar has before this been, several times, checked by his mother in his apparent endeavor to give comfort to my poor girl?"

It was indeed true that Sohar had from the first been singularly engrossed in the fair captive, and his demonstrations were not those of a sensual admirer, to judge by his deference and his kindly attentions, but rather those of an infatuated lover. Marie had observed his demeanor, at first with alarm, but later with a woman's instinctive perception that she would never have anything to fear from him.

Now there came an exciting phase of Sohar's regard for her. All was ready to set out again. Marie was helped to her feet and led to her horse. She put her foot into the stirrup, but was too weak to [illegible] the saddle. Sohar stepped forward and gently began to assist her. Thereupon Hadjar seized her away from his brother, roughly lifted her in his arms and threw her violently into the saddle. Instantly Sohar attacked Hadjar and a fierce fight began. But it was brief. Djemma forced herself between them.

The short remainder of the ride to Pharsa was made with Djemma close to Marie, like a guarding demon, while her sons glared sullenly at each other.

CHAPTER X.

Prisoners in the Old Witch's Dungeon.

THE Castle of Pharsa had been a fort at a time, years agone, when the Touaregs were in warfare with other Arab tribes of the Sahara. It was now in a state of decay, crowning very picturesquely with its broken yet still massive masonry a hillock of some height on the border of the oasis. A wall, breached in many places, served as a girdle to this structure. A solid tower of stone and several minarets rose above it. Although parts were in semi ruin and none of it was used as a habitation, it was held in reverence by those Arabs who were ruled by Djemma and her son Hadjar, for it contained their central place of superstitious worship. It was not a mosque, although they were professedly Mohammedans, but rather a temple of mystery. Somewhere within it was a sacred and secret altar, where Djemma, the priestess, conducted the rites of her obscurely Arabic religion. To that altar very few of her followers were ever permitted to enter. Still more mystic, and absolutely exclusive to her—as it had been to her predecessor in office, Maradah—was the deep cavern below, into which the strange woman disappeared at intervals and from which she always reappeared with a fresh accession of that electric power which made her marvellous.

Our immediate concern is with the captives. A portion of the Castle of Pharsa had, in other years, been a prison; and in that part of it several rooms opening on an inner court were assigned to the imprisonment of Captain Hardizan and his companions. They were taken to their quarters immediately upon their arrival. Since their capture they had, of course, been without weapons. They were now, moreover, searched anew and deprived of even the few small coins in their pockets. That was done by a half dozen ruffians under direction of Sohar. But they did not lay hands on Marie Lauri. It was clear that they regarded her as a special prisoner, beyond their privilege to maltreat.

In a few minutes Djemma entered the court with two Arabs, bearing a couch, which they placed in the cell which the girl was to occupy. Poor Marie, tired to the point of exhaustion, was glad to lie down to rest. She quickly fell into a profound slumber. Then the woman retired from the prison with all the Arabs.

Captain Hardizan and Engineer de Schaller took care at once to explore the place as far as possible. So they made the tour of this inner court, in the midst of which rose a minaret. They found the surrounding wall, being twenty feet high and perfectly smooth, to be impassable. They failed to discover any breach or vulnerable spot. A single door gave access to the court. It had been closed by Sohar, and its thick panels, fortified by iron bands, could not be harmed without tools. This door was the only way out, for the minaret had no aperture save the one opening into the court, and that was clogged with debris. They assumed, too, that all the approaches were guarded by armed men.

During the first hours they waited for food to be brought, and water, too, for they were burning with thirst. None came. Daylight waned and the door did not open, nor was a sound heard. As twilight fell, and after Hardizan had seen that Marie still slept quietly, the men went into one of the other rooms where tufts of dried alfa were to serve for their beds. There they indulged in very sad thought.

"Let us try to sleep," said the engineer.

"And to dream that we are sitting at a well served table," said Sergeant Pistache, "cutlets, salad, a bottle of claret and some coffee and cigarettes to top off with."

"Captain Hardizan and Engineer de Schaller took care at once to explore the place as far as possible."

"She kept Marie close beside her, as though determined that by no possible chance should she escape."

SUNDAY AMERICAN-JOURNAL-EXAMINER PATTERNS

The Making of These Dainty "Bargain Day" Corset Covers Will Afford a Pleasant and Profitable Pastime for Your Leisure Hours.

LOVE of daintiness is an inborn feminine trait. It finds vent through various channels, chief among which is the making of dainty lingerie. This is a pastime in which many women find practical pleasure. For that reason the two "bargain day' patterns for corset covers illustrated herewith will have a special interest for every woman who loves dainty lingerie for the pleasure afforded either in the making or in the ownership.

The patterns for these two corset covers are offered to-day for ten cents—the usual price for one. No. 182—2070 (on the right) is surplice, being shirred full on the shoulders and at the waist line in front. The neck is a low V-shape, front and back, and the armholes are finished with shield sleeves. The edges are adorned with a simple embroidery or lace. For the medium size the pattern requires 1⅛ yards of material. The pattern has been cut in six sizes, 32 to 42 inches bust.

The other pattern, No. 183—2873 (on the left), is a very practical one and will please the most particular woman. Dainty lingerie, which femininity delights to fashion, is often more attractive to the eye than practical. This corset cover has a peplum on the bottom to prevent its frequent rising from the waist line, plenty of fulness over the bust, gathered at the top and waist and the little underarm caps which so many women desire. These may be developed in any of the lingerie materials from muslin to India mull and elaborated with insertion, beading and lace. For a medium size, 1¾ yards are needed for this model, which comes in six sizes 32 to 42 inches bust measure.

To obtain these two corset patterns for ten cents carefully fill in the accompanying blank, giving your name, postoffice address and bust measure. Then mail the filled-in blank and ten cents in money or stamps to Corset Cover Patterns, P. O. Box 260, New York City.

The patterns ordered together with complete instructions showing how to make the corset covers at home yourself will be forwarded to you postpaid by return mail.

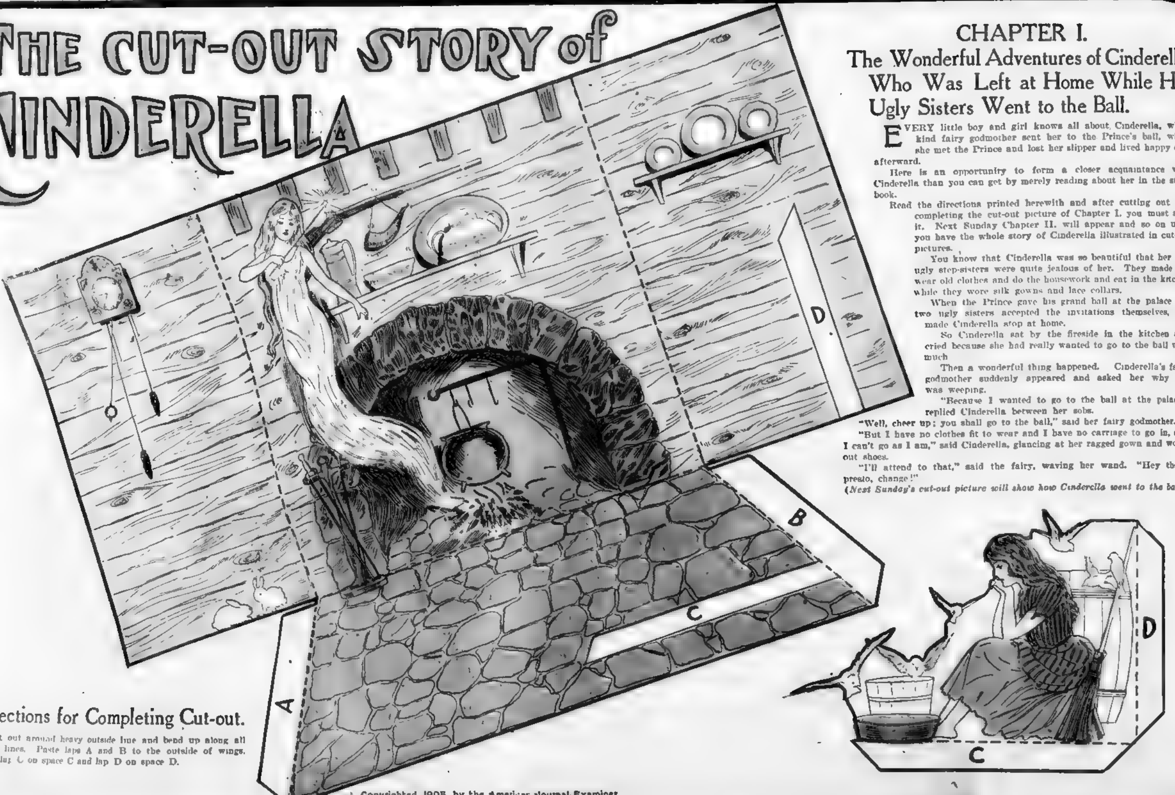
THE CUT-OUT STORY of CINDERELLA



CHAPTER I.

The Wonderful Adventures of Cinderella, Who Was Left at Home While Her Ugly Sisters Went to the Ball.

EVERY little boy and girl knows all about Cinderella, whose kind fairy godmother sent her to the Prince's ball, where she met the Prince and lost her slipper and lived happy ever afterward.

Read the directions printed herewith and after cutting out and completing the cut-out picture of Chapter I. you must save it. Next Sunday Chapter II. will appear and so on until you have the whole story of Cinderella illustrated in cut-out pictures.

You know that Cinderella was so beautiful that her two ugly step-sisters were quite jealous of her. They made her wear old clothes and do the housework and eat in the kitchen while they wore silk gowns and lace collars.

When the Prince gave his grand ball at the palace the two ugly sisters accepted the invitations themselves, but made Cinderella stop at home.

So Cinderella sat by the fireside in the kitchen and cried because she had really wanted to go to the ball very much

Then a wonderful thing happened. Cinderella's fairy godmother suddenly appeared and asked her why she was weeping.

"Well, cheer up; you shall go to the ball," said her fairy godmother.

"But I have no clothes fit to wear and I have no carriage to go in, and I can't go as I am," said Cinderella, glancing at her ragged gown and worn-out shoes.

"I'll attend to that," said the fairy, waving her wand. "Hey there, presto, change!"

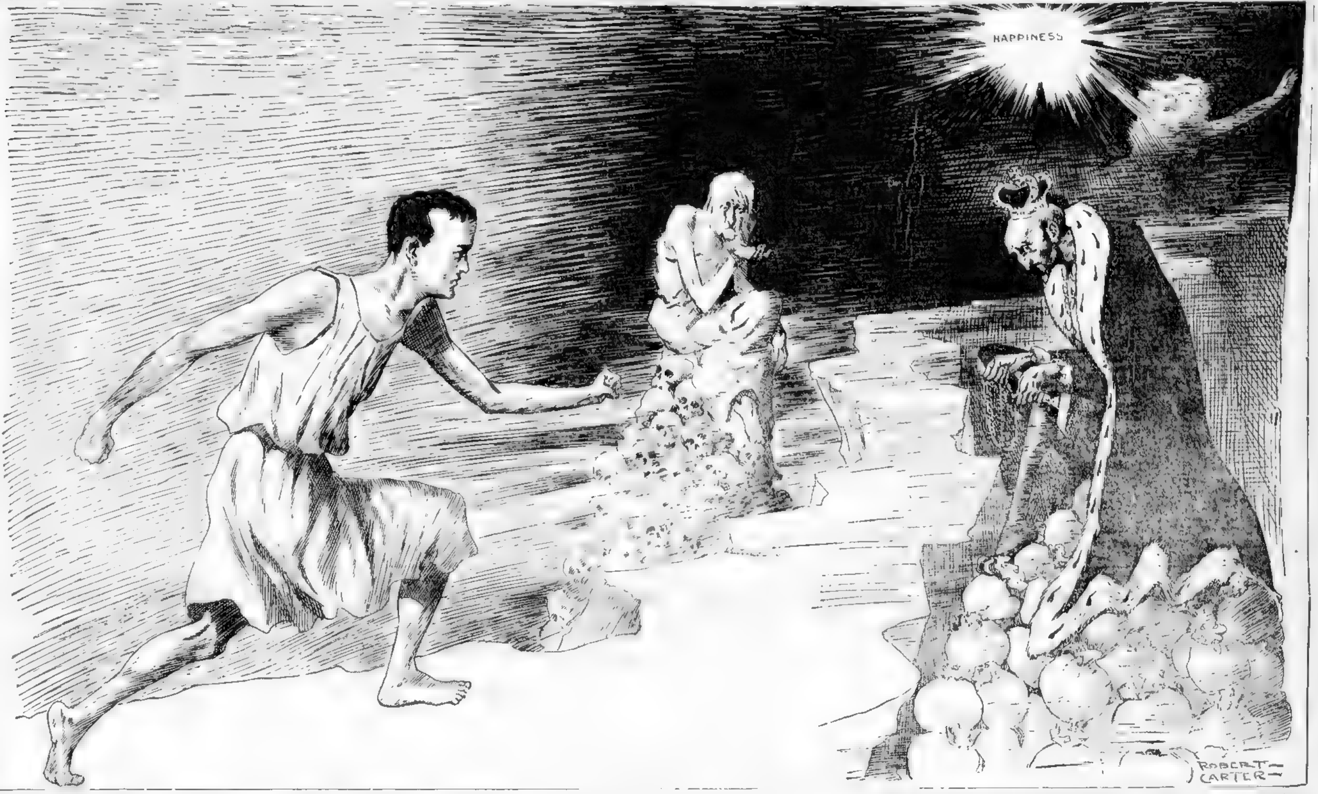
Fourteen Hundred Millions of Us in One Race



With brutalizing poverty on one side, deadening wealth on the other, the road to happiness is a middle path that lies between the two and leads to a goal far beyond either.

"How can I be happy?"

Every human being has his moments of unselfishness, of self-sacrifice and altruism. But, with exceptions that are indeed rare, the persistent struggle and thought among us is for individual happiness and contentment.

And this is not an unfortunate thing, it is not a bad thing for the individual or for the race.

It is to the interest of us all that each should do the best work that he is capable of, AND EVERY ONE DOES HIS BEST WHEN HE IS HAPPY.

The healthy mind lives in the healthy body, the good work is done by the mind that is happy, as well as healthy.

Admitting that the important question of the age, and of all ages, is the question: "How may happiness be secured?" what is the answer that the readers of this newspaper will give to the question?

We believe that it is given fairly well in this picture, which shows happiness shining far beyond poverty and wealth, and reached by a road that lies between the two.

⁂

There is much hypocritical and ignorant talk in the world about the blessings and the contented lot of the poor man. That is all bosh and nonsense.

Poverty is a dreadful curse, the worst that can befall a man, except, perhaps, absolute innate incapacity; and the exception is not important, since, except for accidents of birth and inherited wealth, incapacity and poverty always live together.

Poverty is the mother of drunkenness, ignorance and crime.

Poverty is the mother of dirt—the miserably poor cannot be clean, for cleanliness means money and leisure.

Poverty is the mother of vice. It is an altogether wretched condition, debasing to the mind and to the body.

And this government, which started out hopefully a little more than a hundred years ago, may well fill with anxiety the thoughtful man who sees that our national life tends now to an abnormal accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, and prevents the intended and desirable DISTRIBUTION of wealth to the many.

⁂

Those who established this government intended that the many should control the laws and their administration, and thus make the many PROSPEROUS.

In place of having "the many" as our ruling power, we are rapidly getting MONEY as the ruling power

More and more, MONEY, in the hands of a few, rules the country. If the tendency toward government by money shall continue, the time is not far off when a new adjustment will be demanded, and the individuals that have monopolized the wealth which should make millions happy will be driven from power, as our foreign, but not more unnatural rulers, were driven out a hundred and thirty years ago.

⁂

Every young American beginning life, and every old American who still has his courage and his strength with him, will take good care to dodge that old hag on the left who represents poverty and all its miseries. There is no reason for any great preaching against poverty. Every man avoids it, if he can, and only the smug and fat ignoramus or hypocrite sings its praises.

It is different with that other extreme—vast and aimless wealth.

Nearly all of America strives for it, and while it can be secured by but few, it is the cause of great bitterness, disappointment and useless struggle to millions.

Happiness consists in DEVELOPING THE POWERS WITHIN OURSELVES, in doing the best that we are capable of doing.

A supply of money sufficient to free the mind from anxiety as to the future, to guarantee independence from the whims of others, is all that the sensible man needs or should want.

But in this age, more than any other, the craze is for the making of great fortunes.

That vicious national gambling house which we call Wall Street swallows up hundreds of thousands of fortunes, destroys the comfortable independence of untold numbers struggling foolishly, ignorantly, for what they do not need.

The smaller and even more harmful gambling dens—our public race tracks and gambling houses represent also the frantic struggling for money that is not earned—that could give no happiness even were it obtainable.

⁂

It sounds like a platitude, of course, to tell men to take the middle course in life.

Many will say: "Yes, it is all very well to talk. But I shall try to attain great riches, and if I fail in that, it will be time enough to take the middle course then."

But it will NOT then be time enough. It will be too late

The man who once fails, who is once disappointed, has hard work to start again. The second and the third failure means failure that is permanent.

The thing to do is to start out sensibly, map out a plan that you are capable of carrying to a successful issue, and follow it up to the end persistently.

It is perhaps almost useless to talk against the tendency of the times and of an entire people.

In this country, all minds practically are upon money. All attention is turned toward those that have money.

The man most talked about is Rockefeller, who has the most money. The literary man most talked about is he who earns the most money. As a nation, we live and think and dream dollars.

This is, in its way, a natural development. Our civilization is passing through a phase of mechanical and industrial development. Money is the pay for the good work in the industrial world. And money is, therefore, the evidence of ability—or it was until recently, when the ability to swindle men out of their honest work began to pay much higher rewards than the ability to do honest work.

But the times are changing, and a new period is approaching.

The people of America have serious questions before them, questions that may be settled violently, as in times past, unless the people shall devote their intellect to a peaceable adjustment worthy of rational human beings

The country needs, and will need more every day, thoughtful, educated, earnest men—men that want to DO SOMETHING more important than the accumulation of useless money, that brings only worry or demoralizing self indulgence.

If three or four millions of American boys and young men would stop reading and thinking about HOW TO GET RICH and begin to think instead about HOW TO AMOUNT TO SOMETHING MENTALLY, the present government questions of the United States would be solved and solved peaceably within the next forty years.

But if all the people of the country must continue to strive for money, one result is inevitable. Men of superior power will GET the money that they struggle for. They will be made selfish and heartless by it.

Of the people, a few will be discontented in their half-way success, the great majority will be made restless and dangerous by comparative poverty.

It is not the starving man that is to be feared. His weak body and weak mind can be easily overcome. The man that is hard to manage is he that feels that he is unjustly treated, that he has not got his share, and who is physically and mentally strong enough to emphasize his sentiments.

⁂

The young man who will be of use to this country is he who makes up his mind—

FIRST, TO MAKE HIMSELF INDEPENDENT BY GETTING AS MUCH MONEY AS WILL FREE HIM FROM INDUSTRIAL SLAVERY.

Second, TO STUDY PUBLIC QUESTIONS, interest himself in government and keep the greater part of his energies for his work as a citizen, for his interest in law-making, in the election of officials, in impressing on his fellows the sacredness and power of the ballot.

Keep away from poverty. Do NOT envy or strive for great wealth, which brings no satisfaction. Keep your mind OPEN and working, and you may one day reach happiness, which you will find only when you shall be able to say to yourself honestly that you have done something really worth while, that you have done at least the BEST you could.

ALL your wonderful inventions,
All your houses vast and tall,
All your great-gun fronted vessels,
Every fort and every wall,
With the passing of the ages,
They shall pass, and they shall fall.

AS you sit among the idols
That your avarice gave birth,
As you count the hoarded treasures
That you think of priceless worth,
Time is digging tombs to hide them
In the bosom of the earth.

THERE shall come a great convulsion
Or a rushing tidal wave,
Or a sound of mighty thunders
From a subterranean cave,
And a boasting world's possessions

FROM the Centuries of Silence
We are bringing back again
Buried vase, and bust and column
And the gods they worshipped then,
In the strange, unmentioned cities
Built by prehistoric men.

DID they steal, and lie, and slaughter?
Did they steep their souls in shame?
Did they sell eternal virtues
Just to win a passing fame?
Did they give the gold of honor
For the tinsel of a name?

WE are hurrying all together
Toward the silence and the night;
There is nothing worth the seeking
But the sun-kissed moral height—
There is nothing worth the doing
But the doing of the RIGHT.

Bobbie's Essay on Advertising

By William F. Kirk

"He went to Russia in the middle of the Winter & kept 6 press agents working day and nite sending stuff to the hoam papers about how the boys was standing the trip."

ADVERTISING is whare you go to a newspaper or bill board or sumwhare & tell the wurld to come around & see you. it pays to advertise, beekaus thare has always been lots of it done. It began in the garden of Eden, the snaik didont start it either. Adam started it he felt lonely so he went & put an ad sumwhare. I doant know the name of the paper & the ad sed Middel Aged Gentleman Wishes to Meet Refined Woman of Means, object Matrimony & Eve saw the ad & sed Well here I am, I seen yure ad in the paper then the snaik cum along & put a sine on the tree of nollege the sine sed Right this Way to the Informashun bureau eet a apple & Get Wise then Adam & Eve both ansered the ad & here we all are, advertising ourselves

All live creechers advertise beests & burds & men & everything when a man is good and kind all day long he is just advertising for a sucker to cum [illegible] his hind heels, when a peacock gits out in the sun and walks around it is advertising its [illegible] tail feathers. eeven the fishes advertise I once herd of a pickerel that put an ad in the paper for a room mate but the pickerel got caught befoar anybody ansered the ad

the grate men of history were all advertisers alexander the grate put a ad in the paper saying Wanted moar wurlds to conquer, but only 2 men ansered the ad & thay were both opium feends thay sed thay knew whare thare was a nise patch of wurlds but thay wudent tell Napoleon beleeved in ads, he went to Russia in the middel of the winter & kept 6 press agents working day & nite sending stuff to the hoam papers about how the boys was standing the trip, thay didont stand it vary well

thare was a fellow naimed Mark Anthony who had a fine stoar in Rome & he went to Egypt & while he was gone his wife got mad at the editor of the Rome paper & she took out the big ad that Mister Anthony always had in about the stoar & when Mark got back his bisness was all gone to the bad.

thare are three kinds of ads,

3 press algents

the best ads are in newspapers & street cars & magazines the poor ads are on fences out in the country & painted on barns, & the press algents are everywhare when a press algent does pritty fine werk & gets a raise from $7.00 to $[illegible] a year he is then a Publicity Promoter & has a office boy that tells you to git out, you cant see the man till tomorrow

The newspaper that has the biggest circulation gits the most ads & the most muny for them so all the papers have a circulation manager to tell the truth about how many copies of each edition go to press if you doant think thay tell the truth go & count the papers yureself

the street cars have lots of fancy ads thay are good reeding when you are on yure way to Yonkers or sumwhare. I saw one the other day that sed the skin has 26,873,421 pores & when you washed with that kind of soap all the pores felt grately that shows how hard it is to rite ads, think of the poor fellow that wrote that ad stopping to count all the pores of his skin it must have took him quite a while I guess then sum of the ads in the cars are vary nice poetry the grate poets that cum to New York start in riteing about the fleecy clouds that fill the ambient air & at last thay work up to fine subjecks like dress shields & scrubbing soap sum day I am going to rite a advertising verse myself & send it to a pickle maker but I suppose I will have to take my pay in pickles

thats all I know about advertising it aint as much as I thought I knew when I begun this essay

SALMON SALMON SWEETEST OF FISH MIX WITH SALT WATER AND SERVE IN A DISH —

"Touchin' on and Appertainin' to" Bores

By Dorothy Dix

THERE was a time when the education of every gentleman included instruction in the noble art of self-defence. Our ancestors in the stone age doubtless became skilful in the science of hurling dornicks with a view to saving their own pates. Later on came the cult of swordsmanship. Then men perfected themselves in the use of their fists, and a handiness with the pistol is still esteemed a necessity in certain parts of our own country.

Other times, other manners. Most of us are now in little physical danger from our fellow-creatures, but we are all in imminent peril every day of our lives of being bored to death, and it therefore becomes important that we should study the best methods of protecting ourselves against the bore, and routing him with slaughter.

There are people, of course, who are born fighters. They know instinctively how to use their hands and tongues, and are equal to any adversary. These words are not for them, but for the poor, meek, helpless people who have never studied the art of self-defence in society.

Varieties of the Dreaded Bore

Chief among this latter class are old maids, who, having no husbands, no children and no servants to discuss, have suffered untold agonies from the married women of their acquaintance. The affliction of having to listen to these bores has driven some women into the madhouse, and others into matrimony, yet no spinster need hesitate to put on the conversational gloves with a married woman if she will first learn how to spar.

To do this she need only acquire a romantic love story, real or imaginary, and develop a mania for confiding it to a woman as soon as she commences talking about her husband. By all feminine parliamentary law a love story has the floor, and nobody can interrupt it. Few, however, care to hear it, and if an old maid can establish the reputation of being ready to fire off the sad, sad story of her life at sight, she may confidently count on other women steering clear of topics that are likely to lead to personal reminiscences.

The mother of the infant phenomenon is a trifle more dangerous, but she also can be forced to throw up her hands. The old maid who means to protect herself here must go loaded for bear. She must study the funny columns in the newspapers and memorize the alleged bon mots of imaginary infants. Then whenever the proud mamma relates the smart things her little Sallie said, or the funny things her Little Jane did, the old maid must blaze away with a fusillade of anecdotes about the baby wit of the comic paper.

Other People's Clever Children

Nobody wants to hear about the clever things that other people's children did, especially when it makes their own look like candidates for the feeble-minded institution, and after one such attack the average mother will flee from the scene. In aggravated cases where the infant prodigy recites, or plays on the piano, it is sometimes necessary to retaliate by bringing in a dog and having him go through his tricks, or introduce a parrot that, after much coaxing, can be induced to say "Polly wants a cracker." Fortunately, though, such extreme measures do not often have to be adopted.

For the women with the servant habit of conversation nothing is so effective as a long, conversation nothing is so effective as a long and endless and pointless disquisition of the various places where one has boarded, with diagrams of the different peculiarities of the landladies and boarders. To introduce this topic into a conversation is equivalent to knocking down the listener with a stuffed club, but desperate situations require desperate measures, and the provocation renders it admissible.

To Settle the Self Made Man

For the self-made man, who worships his creator and who yearns to spend hours telling you what a Napoleon of finance he is, and how he always knows which way the market is going, there is one line of self-defence so simple and so easy that a child can use it. Always ask him to subscribe to your pet charity. The reason people talk about themselves so much is because talk is cheap, and the minute you make them pay for it they begin to economize on it.

On the other hand, if you are afflicted with an acquaintance who comes to see you to tell you his troubles, insist upon lending him a little money. The chances are that he will never darken your doors again, for he will always be afraid of being dunned. There is no other way of getting rid of a bore like getting him in your debt, and it is always worth the price.

To protect yourself from the fish liar and the man who has shot big game in the West, or who was in the war, there is no known method except to get the drop on him and blaze away at sight. Unless you are quick on the trigger, you are lost. Once let him get started and you are in for the inquisition. Every prudent person, however, knows his enemies by sight and should be prepared to deal with them, and it is always perfectly possible to get such a running start on a story that nobody will dare break into it. Thus can you protect yourself from the garrulous. If you will notice you will see that the man and woman who are fond of talking invariably pick out their friends among the silent and slow-witted.

People with hobbies have to be fought with their own weapons. The only way to keep from being bored to extinction by your friends' fads, is to have a bigger fad yourself, and talk about it in a louder tone of voice. It's to keep from hearing about other people's causes that most of us go in for causes ourselves.

For the caller who never knows when to go an extremely uncomfortable chair is often a bulwark of defence. This is why women's drawing rooms never have a seat that doesn't tie knots in your legs, and break the small of your back. If this doesn't work—if a man is indifferent to physical torture and he stays on and on, the only thing you can do is to get him on his feet, and imperceptibly steer him to the door. Few people have the nerve to stay after they once get up. If, though, he sits down again, the woman had as well give up. She has found the champion bore, and he has tagged her.

Of course, these are only a few elementary principles of the noble art of self-defence, which we must all study, if we desire to live in reasonable peace and happiness.

DOROTHY DIX.

Young Woman, Do You Eat Air? Do You Breathe as Nature Intended You Should? If Not, Then You Have Much to Learn From Fair Faddists.

What the Morning Glory Girl Is Getting When She Draws a Breath

"You can grow friends, beautiful surroundings, money, loving thoughts, wisdom—any thing YOU WILL, by this practice."

—From the doctrine of the "air-eaters."

Emulating the Fair Flower of the Morning Is the Fad of the Hour at Fashionable Watering Places Along the Coast of Staid New England.

And thereby she attains the Life Beautiful

Beauty of body. Beauty of mind Beauty of soul All these are the attributes of the Morning Glory girl, according to the cult of those who "BREATHE"

Not breathing mechanical, unconscious breaths, simply to keep alive

But breathing as God intended we should. Breathing fully consciously, joyously. Breathing scientifically In other words, "eating air."

And morning air particularly hence the "Morning Glory" name

The Morning Glory, among the most beautiful of matutinal blooms, turns its graceful trumpet flower toward the rising sun and rejoices in the bright, invigorating air of the new-born day.

The Morning Glory girl, rising early, hastens to "eat the morning air"

How to Attain Beauty.

In the words of an apostle of this cult:

"Throw your shoulders back, your head up, look like a sweet and gracious queen, turn your eyes toward heaven and all good, and BREATHE."

Thus does the Morning Glory girl Fairer than the flower itself, she inhales the life-giving, dew-impregnated ozone and exhales it again joyously. This is the way the Morning Glory girl "eats air."

Who is the Morning Glory girl?

She is the society girl of our twentieth century, the enthusiastic seeker after things good and sweet, after health, beauty and all happiness. She is the typical American girl, and she is everywhere

Boston has the Morning Glory girl, many of them. She is at the North Shore Summer resorts, at exclusive Beverly and Manchester She is along the South Shore. She is at gay Newport, conservative Bar Harbor, at Mt. Desert. She is at Lenox.

A charming example of the Morning Glory girl is our own Dorothy Forbes of Boston, or the fascinating and breezy Eleanor Sears. Clever and daring Cynthia Roche, belle of the Newport younger set; winsome Frederica Webb, they are Morning Glory girls

Devotees of the Fad.

Another typical devotee of the "air-eating" cult is Miss Phyllis Wolff Lydia Andrews from the West, with the voice of a song bird, "eats air" Miss Margaret Mitchell, who is a better amateur actress than most professionals, is included among the Morning Glory girls.

Such are some of the maids who follow this society fad, so to call it

Is it simply a fad? No. Society girls have taken up this practice of scientific breathing and so the world calls it a fad. But it is founded on deeper principles than the mere approval or disdain of Fashion.

But, having adopted it, the pretty and fascinating society girl is benefiting enormously by it.

Have you noticed the livelier complexion of many of the Summer girls. It is not the art of the boudoir and the lady's maid. It is due to "eating air"

Have you noticed her more erect carriage, her more splendid vitality, her fuller chest, her more abundant life and more glorious health and strength? These are due, the girls admit, to following the Morning Glory habit

Origination of the Cult.

So this "eating air" is much more than a mere fad. It is a health-giving practice at the least. To its most ardent devotees it is nearly a religion, so fervently do they practice it and so devoutly do they trust to it

This "air-eating" cult fits, with happiest manner, into the theory, popular of late, that every woman should suggest some special flower. The storied East is credited with originating this idea. Japan, flower-loving kingdom that it is, probably gave birth to this pretty fancy.

The slender, drooping maid is the lily. The dainty, pert and saucy miss is the pansy The modest, timid girl, with down-cast eye, is the violet And so on. There are girls to fit many types of flowers, all beautiful, all delighting the eye.

And so it comes to pass that the girl who "eats air," who is strong, yet beautiful, who is graceful, yet virile, who arises early and turns to the life-giving breezes to inspire her being with the ozone of daybreak, is the Morning Glory, most typical of the American girl

It's a peculiarly fitting impersonation, appropriate and poetic.

Common Sense Back of It.

Yet there's practical sense back of it, practical as the good, sound sense of the American girl herself. She has been the dancing girl and danced away her miles and miles of waltz and two-step. She has been the golf girl, the rowing boating, tenis and automobile girl. Why not be the Morning Glory girl also and insure her health and beauty by the simplest of all exercises?

"It's heavenly, this being a Morning Glory girl," said a fair maiden on one of the North Shore beaches.

"Does it do you any real good?" she was asked by a sceptic.

"Silly, of course it does. Don't you remember, in school even, you were given instruction in breathing. Do you know how to breathe? Now really. I don't half believe you do. Now you watch me."

The glorious young creature stood erect, facing the ocean whence came a life-giving breeze

"You stand just as straight as you can and you throw your shoulders back, so——"

The graceful figure was as erect as an arrow. The plump shoulders rolled back a little. The rounded chest expanded as the shoulders moved back

"Now you look up, so ——"

The blue eyes turned up toward the blue sky

"Now, you just watch me breathe — "

Results of the Lesson.

The red lips parted slightly. The curves of the chest became more pronounced as the youthful lungs filled with air. It seemed a minute before the girl exhaled. Then she inhaled again, then exhaled.

"There," she said, finally, "that's just fine, it's splendid. Why, you girls don't know how it feels, especially if you come out here in the early morning when everything is fresh and bright and sparkling, stand here on the beach and breathe that way."

"So that's what you've been doing out here at sunrise, standing on the beach, is it?" said one of the spectators. "I thought you were crazy"

"Well, I wasn't. I was just 'Morning Glorying,' as we call it."

And, although she may not know it, she is doing what the Hindoo adepts did hundreds and hundreds of years ago. The wise men of India knew the benefit of right breathing And they have declared their life has been prolonged by it

What Enthusiasts Claim for It.

It is even claimed by enthusiasts of the cult that material things can be influenced for the follower of the cult, that not only health, but wealth, fame, power and position can be obtained by "eating air"

"If you have a special pursuit in which you desire success," says the enthusiast, "remember it when taking these exercises"

It is averred that keeping this pursuit in mind at such time will procure success in it, just as it brings physical health. Thus the cult takes on the dignity of a psychological principle

Here is the law of breathing rightly, or "eating air," as laid down for the followers of the cult and as practised by the Morning Glory girl

The Lesson in Detail

"Throw your shoulders back, hold your head up, look like a sweet and gracious queen turn your eyes toward heaven and all good and breathe. Inhale love, power, shine, life—slowly, quietly, let it thrill you and permeate your every atom of being and fill your solar plexus with joy, let it transmute you and be transmuted, then lower your eyes, spread out your hands while in blessing and breathe forth quietly smoothly, slowly, all joys to all mankind

"If you are a man never mind about the straight-front corset just stand like an athlete, chest out and abdomen in, and take long, strong swigs from the sun; let them exhilarate all your being, soul and body; then breathe out blessings on the world Take two or three breaths at each exercise, exercise several times a day, in standing position if you prefer; and recline night and morning for more breathing

"If you have a special pursuit in which you desire success, remember it when you are taking these exercises. Whilst you are inhaling a breath you are negative, receptive, whilst you are exhaling you are positive, radiant. You are giving out life to your dominion—to all who are less highly developed than yourself, to your environment in general, to your business, to whatsoever you are interested in. Then as you exhale a breath spread forth your hands and breathe life into whatever you desire. You can grow friends, beautiful surroundings, money, loving thoughts, wisdom—anything YOU WILL by this practice. I don't care two cents whether you have faith in it or not—just do it and you will find out that what I affirm is true."

SCARLET LIES

CHAPTER CL.

Between the Devil and the Deep Sea.

MORLEY DARCH very soon got tired of killing time in Paris, and had almost made up his mind to risk everything and return to Boston, despite the strong advice of Fergus Braine to the contrary.

He had many things demanding his attention connected with his business undertakings and social engagements; but it was not true to assume that any of these had a fraction of the weight with him that the knowledge that Mary Armstrong would be there in the course of a day or two had.

He wanted to be there to watch developments and choose his moment

Braine wired with a regularity that became very monotonous

"All going well. Lie low Do nothing until you hear from me. Am sanguine of success."

But that sort of thing did not suit Morley Darch. He was impatient of checks and delays, impetuous, hot tempered. He wanted to act, and act swiftly

"I'll go to-morrow," he said to himself. "Yes, I shall go to Boston at once."

Just then he received Judith Mort's telegram announcing the proposed secret marriage of Menzies and Mary Armstrong and forthwith he paid the bill and started for Boston as fast as boat and train could carry him.

He shrugged his shoulders despondently as he read what she had written.

"What's the good?" he asked himself "Nobody can do anything, if Armstrong is bent on moral, social and financial suicide."

"I might try a telegram on Armstrong," he exclaimed aloud, as a new thought struck him. "Rather a good idea, though dangerous with that fire-eating Menzies hanging around. I don't want to get arrested the moment I land home, and Menzies is just the sort to do a thing like that. I hate these desperately impulsive men."

But, for all that Morley Darch decided to put his new idea into execution

Armstrong, he opined, would sleep that night at his home. He therefore addressed a telegram to him:

"Hear that your daughter is to be married to Captain Menzies. Pray accept my congratulations and convey them to the happy and fortunate pair. I shall bring my wedding present, as promised. Better late than never. MORLEY DARCH."

He was not quite satisfied with the cheap irony of the message, but could think of nothing better

"Anyhow, he will understand," he said "If he doesn't, he isn't the man I have taken him for. By Jove, what a wedding present it shall be!"

He realized the temptation which assailed him to send a similarly worded telegram to Mary Armstrong herself or to Captain Menzies. After all, it was Armstrong with whom he must deal. No one else really counted.

Having dispatched his telegrams, he started at once for home.

And the first person he saw in Boston was old Mr. Gunter, Braine's confidential managing clerk.

"Hallo, Gunter!" exclaimed Darch, as the [illegible]-faced old man came up to him. "What are you doing here at this time of the morning?"

"Mr. Braine sent me to meet you, Mr Darch," said Gunter.

"But how the dickens did Braine know when I was coming?"

"Oh, Mr. Braine's [illegible] wired him."

"Well, I'm hanged," [illegible] the millionaire. "What an organization. I wonder if there is anything you don't know!"

"Not many things, I fancy, Mr Darch," said old Gunter wearily. "But hadn't we better get to business?"

"Business. Why, yes, of course. But since Braine knew when I was coming, why didn't he meet me himself? Did he get my telegram last night? And what is the news? Has anything been done? Do you know about the matter? Is—"

"Forgive me, Mr. Darch," interrupted old Gunter in a mildly deprecatory way. "I shall forget the order of your questions if you ask so many. Your first, sir—Mr Braine wished me to tell you that he received your telegram and has succeeded in stopping the"—the old man glanced cautiously around—"in stopping the ceremony."

"Good man," exclaimed Darch delightedly. "Good man! Come and have a drink, Gunter. By Jove," he wiped his brow—"that is good news! What a load off my mind. I've been through tortures ever since I left Paris. But how was it done?"

"Your second question, Mr. Darch," Gunter went on imperturbably.

But Morley Darch stopped him.

"I don't want to hear any more, Gunter," he said. "Come along and have a drink."

"I never drink, Mr Darch," said Gunter.

"Well, come and watch me, then; and you can tell me the rest."

"Very good, Mr Darch. But, if I may be forgiven for saying so, I think time is very valuable. Mr. Braine is at the present moment with Miss Mort. He asked me to respectfully request you to lose no time in

"Right you are. But what's in the wind?"

"Many things, sir, I believe. Mr. Braine would have met you here, but for the danger of—of his being followed, if you understand."

"Followed!" exclaimed Darch vaguely. "Why should he be followed?"

"He considered your presence in Boston, sir, as being a very rash step on your part, and he is naturally very anxious not to publish the fact by any—er—indiscreet action on his part."

Gunter raised a warning finger.

"[illegible], sir," he said in a low voice. "I am not at all sure whether we are [illegible] observed. I don't think so, but you see, Mr. Darch, you are very well known, and you took no precautions, if I may say so."

"No precautions?"

"The police, Mr. Darch," said Gunter. "[illegible] Mr. Braine advises you [illegible] greatest caution. Several [illegible] developments have taken [illegible] lately, and Mr. Braine is exceedingly [illegible] that you have seen fit to disregard his advice as to returning to America."

"Oh, confound his advice!" ejaculated Morley Darch impatiently. "I can't waste my time like this. Come, Gunter, let's take a hansom at once."

"Yes, sir."

Darch gave some hurried instructions to his man, and told him to wait at his rooms for further orders, and that officially he was not in the country. The man appeared to understand; but, for all that, five minutes afterward he was talking to a genial individual, who looked like a gentleman's valet, but who was in reality a very shrewd detective under Gerrard of the State police.

It was, perhaps, as well for Mr. Gunter's and Mr. Morley Darch's peace of mind that neither of those gentlemen was Aware of This Fact.

Gunter was discretion personified, and on their way to the hotel, although Darch plied him with innumerable questions, Fergus Braine's managing clerk answered him equivocally or not at all. His master would do everything that was necessary in due course.

Morley Darch was very nervous. Gunter's manner and sinister suggestions as to the police [illegible] his nerves, which, with the excitement of the last few hours, were not in a particularly good state.

Fergus Braine received his client in a private sitting room. He looked worried and tired, and as a man [illegible] who has [illegible] night.

[illegible] discreetly withdrew, but with a sigh of relief. Old Gunter hated this work and this life of lies and intrigue, but he was enmeshed in the vast organization of Braine's, ground down under an iron heel of tyranny, forever mindful of the awful power possessed by Fergus Braine over him.

"What do you mean?" asked Darch sharply.

"I mean that you are singularly fortunate to have got so far without being arrested."

"Arrested?"

Darch went a shade paler.

"Yes, I said 'arrested,'" replied Braine irritably. "You have done an incredibly unwise thing to come to Boston just now."

"But it was important," protested Morley Darch. "You must see how vitally important it was."

"You could Have Trusted Me."

"As it turns out, I see I could. Tell me, Braine, exactly what has happened."

"A great many things have happened, Mr Darch," replied Fergus Braine, "and happened all at once as it were——"

"But about Mary Armstrong and this wedding?"

"Oh, that's a matter of minor importance," said Braine. "I had almost forgot [illegible]."

"Minor importance, [illegible]," exclaimed Darch. "I like that, when it is a question of vital importance to me—the thing which has brought me over from Paris!"

"And which will, unless you are extremely careful, in all probability land you in prison," cheerfully interpolated Fergus Braine. "Yes, Mr Darch, you've got your foot into it this time with a vengeance. You've got Armstrong's back up; and you've got a tough customer to deal with in Armstrong, that I can assure you. Then there's your friend, Captain Menzies. Beware. If I were you I shouldn't cross his path just now. He might hurt you."

Student Life in Paris

By Lady Henry Somerset

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal Examiner.

IT is always a curious study to compare the preconceived ideas formed by those who have no personal experience with the actual fact, and on no subject are there more absurd fallacies extant than about students' life in Paris.

They vary between pictures of wild vice and dishevelled dissipation and mere frivolous expenditure of time and money Only a few realize the amount of serious study and hard work that make up the real life of the Quarter.

Paris itself means many things to many minds. To some men it is a place where they indulge in much they would be ashamed of at home. To some women it is a gigantic dressmaking establishment, to others a bank holiday pleasure resort, but to artists and to scientific and literary men it is the home of ideas, the city hospitable to new thought, where philosophy is born, for at Oxford it is only received when it is robust and matured.

In the Latin Quarter the art student finds what he goes to seek. In a life free from social convention men and women are placed according to what they do and what they are, not according to the rank of their connections or the length of their purse

A book has recently been published by Miss Florence Roosevelt, a lady who claims kinship with the President of the United States, in which she deals with the life of the students' quarter

She tells us that her description is "transcribed from life," and she says that she wishes to warn intending students of the difficulties and dangers which await them abroad, and then she proceeds to collect samples of failure, with the evident intention of pointing to domestic life as the only safe career for a woman. But somehow to those who know something of the atmosphere of the Quartier Latin the book is unconvincing, and little is recognizable save the names of the streets.

She describes a group of American girls, but their conversation brings to mind pages from Miss Alcott's "Little Women" or scenes out of "The Wide, Wide World" rather than anything which is vivid in students' life

There is little description of that strenuous existence, of the hard work, the plain living, the constant economy, and the pleasure to be found not only in work but also in the recreation that is obtained by visits to the art treasures of Paris, excursions by steamer, tram, or on foot to the glorious woods and forests that surround that beautiful city, or the theatres and concerts where the best music and drama can be had at a small cost, that life of joyous economy and earnest purpose, full of gayety, but also one of continuous and real hard work

The danger that Miss Roosevelt insists on, that incompetent professors will flatter incapable pupils in order to retain their fees, cannot surely be great, where members of such institutions as the Conservatoire, the Salon des Beaux Arts and the Academie hold Government Professors, and where men of the standing of Julian, Colarossi, Robert Fleury, Bouguereau, Lefebre, Constant, L'Hermitte and others give corrections week by week, often gratuitously

The Studio fees in the majority of cases go to the proprietor, and cover the expense of rent, heating, lighting and management, with, of course, his own profit, but these fees do not go to the professors. There need, therefore, be no anxiety as to the quality of the instruction to be had. Such men are only too glad to insist upon the fact that there is no short cut to fame, and only too ready to help those who are seriously anxious to learn, and to recognize and push talent where they observe it

But perhaps even more valuable than the criticism of the professors is the influence of the high standard of work among the students, and the frank mutual criticism which goes on. I think all who are accustomed to work among painters and sculptors are impressed by the absence of jealousy and the generous help which the stronger workers are always ready to give to those who are less advanced, and herein lies one of the greatest charms of the life.

The other day I was talking to a woman artist who has studied in Paris, and she told me that in one studio there were representatives of as many as sixteen different countries.

Most of them had obtained scholarships or earned by professional work the money to go through their art student's course in Paris. The average of the work was very good and the help given really valuable, while the great diversity of style developed the originality of each

"After working hours," she said, "or between them—for many of us work at times at three classes a day, from 8 to 12, from 1 to 5 and from 7 to 10—there were the walks by the river and prowls down the bookstalls on the quays, and who that knows the Seine at the hour of sunset does not love it? Then came the mealtimes in the creameries and restaurants of the Quarter, where many friendships and acquaintances were formed, and our talks took in everything in heaven and on earth, for were not all quarters of the world represented among us? We all had our own ideas and philosophy of life and art, and had found a common language in which, though often hesitatingly, we would express them

"I believe the cooking and the food were almost invariably good, and quite cheap For dejeuner, or dinner, we paid from one franc upward. Furnished rooms or tiny unfurnished flats were very moderate in rent, and quite comfortable, though of course not luxurious."

I myself have a vivid recollection of visiting an American girl some years ago in the Quarter. She was studying as a sculptor, and I well remember the bright Spring day when I knocked at her studio door, and the little, girlish figure opened it in her long blue pinafore. She was at work there, and some of her compositions were astonishing, coming from so young a student. Her little bed stood in the corner of her studio, and she had a tiny cooking apparatus, for she certainly had mastered the art of simplifying life Her work was admirable, and her joyous manner showed me that an existence devoted to one object with one ideal is probably the best heritage that can come to any one.

Of course tragedies sometimes happen in the students' quarter, as elsewhere, but they are the exception, and in the main the life is healthy morally and physically. The simpler life can be more easily realized in Paris than perhaps anywhere else in the world if one lives in the Quartier Latin. Intellectual and artistic faculties find enjoyment and education there which they could probably meet with nowhere else. Paris is a good training ground The real danger lies in the fact that it is easy to do good work week by week in the studios when stimulated by sympathy and appreciation of both success and failure, but it is very hard for the art student to keep up this standard single handed when he returns to his own country and has to live often among those who do not know good work from bad, and too often prefer the latter It is then that the testing time of an artist's capabilities really comes, when, instead of studies, pictures have to be painted or statues produced, when the children of the brain have to be put up for sale in the market place. Then, when art has become a trade, it is good to look back upon the time of study having been one of gayety and enjoyment, when ambitions seemed likely to be realised and life was joyous in the clear atmosphere of the city of fountains

Old Orchard

Old Orchard Beach, Me., Aug. 19.—More people were sheltered beneath the roofs of the cottages and hotels here last Sunday and Monday night than ever before in the annals of the resort. Every cottage had its quota of guests and hotels were running over with tourists. For the first time this season cot beds in large numbers were set up in corridors and some late comers were [illegible] to sleep in hammocks [illegible].

Last Sunday it is estimated that forty [illegible] attended the [illegible] and visited the points of interest on the ocean front during the day. Dr. A. B. Squirrel Island

Squirrel Island, Me., Aug. 19.—This has been the liveliest week of all the season at this resort, as the fete week exercises have been carried out on a more extensive and elaborate program than ever before. The exercises begun Monday and continued through to-day and included all kinds of athletic events, with many social affairs interspersed.

A. H. Davenport of Boston, president of the island association has just presented to the library copies of what were considered the twelve most popular books of last year.

A big vaudeville show was given at the Casino Thursday night in which amateurs carried out the entire entertainment and made a most decided hit. Many of them were the equals of professionals in their acts.

Hon. E. P. Ricker of Poland has been one of the prominent visitors to the island this week, having come here before going to his property at Rockland, the Samoset.

One of the very interesting personages passing the season here is J. E. Hubbard of Wiscasset, a Harvard graduate, and who has been very successful in advancing Y. M. C. A. work in Havana.

Cunner fishing is proving a popular form of amusement among the young ladies on the island this Summer, many of whom have made big catches.

The new casino at Ocean Point has been opened this week and has been visited by many of the people from the island. It is very conveniently arranged and bids fair to be very popular.

T. Arthur Harrison of Cleveland, O., has been on the island all the week to attend the fete exercises and leaves next week for Bar Harbor, where he will pass the remainder of the season.

Miss Helene Moody of Bath, the talented pianiste, has returned from Bar Harbor, where she has given recitals, and while there had the pleasure of meeting Vice President and Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks. Miss Moody leaves shortly for Chicago, and after giving a recital there will go to Washington.

Summer Life Was Never More Gay Than Now at New England Resorts

Newport

Newport, R. I., Aug. 19.—This was indeed a gala week for Newport. The coming of the New York Yacht squadron of more than sixty vessels, steamers, auxiliaries, power boats, schooners, yawls and sloops; the race Tuesday for the Astor cups, the four days' racing by the Newport Yacht Racing Association; the opening of the polo season on the grounds of the Westchester Polo Club at Bateman's Point, with the Myopia first team, with [illegible] at [illegible] L. Agassiz as stars, [illegible] Alexander [illegible] J., and Matthews [illegible] made their first appearance on Thursday, marked the height of the season for this year, though the dog show, lawn tennis tournament and the horse show are yet to come.

Prince Henry of Battenberg, with a squadron of British warships, is still expected at Newport, though perhaps not before October, when many of the cottagers will have departed. The prince is a great admirer of President Roosevelt, and to whom it is understood he will bring a special message from King Edward VII. The prince was in this country thirty-three years ago.

Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt's advent into yachting circles, where she is to manoeuvre a new Herreshoff thirty-footer, yet to be given a name, [illegible] much zest to the [illegible] of sport in Newport. Captain Charles [illegible] has been engaged by Mrs. Vanderbilt as the professional skipper for her thirty footer.

Rear Commodore and Mrs. W. Townsend Colbron of the Columbia Yacht Club, arrived here Monday with the New York Yacht Club Squadron, on their new schooner yacht Witoco. They are taking the eastward cruise to Marblehead and have among the guests on board Miss Ethel [illegible] Nowell, daughter of Mrs. Thomas R. Nowell of Newport and Boston, and Mr. J. H. Gielow, the well known ship designer.

Pretty Bertha [illegible] of Brockton, who has been visiting in Newport some weeks, was the guest of honor at a whist party Wednesday afternoon given by Mrs. John H. Wetherell at her fine Rhode Island avenue residence.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor appeared at the Newport Casino Monday forenoon having arrived with her husband on the steam yacht Nourmahal in season for the Astor cup races on Tuesday. In a very few minutes she was the centre of an admiring group of men and women. The Astors will be at Friedenheim, the Havemeyer villa, for the remainder of the season.

Though the millionaire cottagers are making no talk in public about the big increase in their personal property taxes here this year, having in a number of cases already settled with the city, it is known to be a [illegible] subject among themselves at dinner [illegible] in their Summer homes. John R. Drexel, Henry A. C. Taylor, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown, Mr. and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman and others have asked the council to modify the amounts assessed against them [illegible] as being excessive. The cottagers will not do battle through lawyers, nor do they propose to go on the stand and swear that they do not possess the sums named in the new tax book, but if no relief is given [illegible] will be sought in cases where their personal property [illegible] likely to be [illegible] up every year. Then again it is asserted that the [illegible] in the aristocratic cottage colony will not bring anywhere near as much money as before the tax raise and that it will also tend to keep others from erecting places of their own here and that the final result will be a boomerang for the city in the many withdrawals as citizens of Newport.

For some weeks now Miss Anna Tooker Best, the handsome daughter of Mrs. Clermont L. Best, has been training almost daily in long distance swimming stunts at Bailey's Beach. If nothing happens Miss Best expects to shortly attempt a record breaking swim around to Hazard's Beach, a distance of about a mile and a quarter. Miss Best, who has a strong, plump, athletic figure, hopes to do the trick in less time than her distinguished predecessors, Miss Eleanora R. Sears of Boston and Miss Edna Lazarus of Newport, holders of the present championship record of one hour and fifteen minutes.

Colonel and Mrs. John Jacob Astor entertained a large party on board the steam yacht Nourmahal for the Astor cup race on Tuesday. Rear Commodore Henry Walters and Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones entertained on the steam yacht Narada and Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor on the steam yacht [illegible].

Mr. and Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll returned to Newport early in the week from their extended European trip. Royal Phelps Carroll is a yachting enthusiast and was formerly owner of the famous schooner yacht Navahoe.

The arrival of Miss Eleanora R. Sears fresh from lawn tennis laurels on the North Shore and of Miss Marion Fenno bidding in advance to take part in the women's tennis tournament at the Casino the past week, was an event in itself of no little importance. Miss Sears is a guest of Miss Anita Sands.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Thaw of Newport and Pittsburg, who are spending the present Summer at Stockbridge, are to occupy Beach Mound next Summer, where they will bring out their daughter Miss Henrietta Thaw. Benjamin Thaw is an uncle of the Countess of Yarmouth, former Miss Alice Thaw.

Miss Gladys Lawson, eldest daughter of Thomas W. Lawson, whose engagement was recently announced to Eben Blaine Stanwood is shortly expected at Narragansett Pier, where her coming is looking forward to with much interest by the Pier society.

Francis C. Carley and his fiancee, Miss Irene King, have been roundly entertained at Newport. Mr. Carley is the son of Francis D. Carley and a brother of Mrs. Oliver Harriman (Grace Carley). Miss King is the daughter of Mrs. J. Howard King of Albany and New York. Mr. Carley has another sister, the former Miss Pearl Carley who married Richard Howland Hunt. After a Dakota divorce she married the town druggist of South Dakota, [illegible]. The Carley-King wedding will be celebrated September 21 in the Congregational Church at Ridgefield, Ct., the Summer home of the bride-elect's mother.

William Gould Brokaw's schooner yacht Sybarita, had a number of titled foreigners on board at Newport. They included Count Alexander Von Beroldingen and Marquis Terre Del Hermose.

Watch Hill

Watch Hill, R. I., Aug. 19.—The army and navy were represented at the Hill during the week by two distinguished officers. General Frederick D. Grant spent a day at Fort Mansfield on his regular tour of inspection, and Admiral Sigsbee was a guest of Daniel J. Sully of New York at Kenneth Ridge for several days.

J. B. Thomas, Jr., captain of the Yale track team of 1903, is popular among the young set at the Hill this season. Mr. Thomas is staying at the Ocean House.

Mrs. Rodman E. Griscom of the West Cottage gave a bridge whist party and supper, at which there were fifty guests, on Wednesday. It was one of the most brilliant social affairs given at the club house this season.

The Ocean House annual ball will take place next Tuesday evening. The big open golf tournament at the Misquamicut Golf Club [illegible] the same day.

Rear Admiral Evans will return to the Hill August [illegible] as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. Sully. Admiral Evans's squadron will be anchored off East Beach and a reception and dance will be given in his honor at Kenneth Ridge. The athletic field has been engaged for the afternoon of the 26th for a baseball contest between the squadron's two crack baseball teams.

There is great activity on the Misquamicut golf links this season. Among the players who are daily on the greens are Don Nichols, Henry Burdick, Billy Lyon, Jack Pope, Captain Herne, Ray Holland, Harry Darlington, Jr., Harry Buffman, Miss Fanny Lyon, Miss Rose Naething and Daniel T. Lyon. A new club flag was unfurled over the club house last Friday. It has a red body, with a green monogram in the centre.

Miss Ethel Parks of Providence is again among the lively Ocean House set. Miss Parks returned with her father, G. W. Parks, early in the week.

Mrs. William DeLoss Love, Miss Ethel H. Love and Miss Annie Love of Hartford are guests at the Hotel Plimpton, where they are joining in the various recreations of the Plimpton set.

Bar Harbor

Bar Harbor, Me., Aug. 19.—During the week Bar Harbor has entertained several men whose names are familiar to every schoolboy in the United States. Vice President Fairbanks, who has been the guest of Hon. and Mrs. John B. Henderson, was the central figure, and next in prominence was Judge Alton B. Parker, Democratic candidate for President, who was here for a day. With Judge Parker was John B. McDonald, the man who built the New York subway. William Travers Jerome, District Attorney of New York, came Sunday, and while here was the guest of his assistant, Mr. Arthur Train.

Vice President and Mrs. Fairbanks left Monday morning for Ellsworth, where they were the guests for a day of Senator and Mrs. Eugene Hale. Their visit to Bar Harbor has been a most delightful one, and they speak in terms of the highest praise of the resort.

One of the largest and most delightful social events of the season was the garden party given Friday afternoon at Kenarden Lodge, the beautiful Summer home of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Kennedy of New York. Kenarden Lodge is one of the most charming estates in Bar Harbor and the new Italian gardens recently completed, have given even more beauty to the place for which nature and art have done so much. The guests, who numbered several hundred, were received by Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, assisted by Dr. and Mrs. Schauffler. Mrs. Kennedy was assisted in pouring tea by Miss C. S. Baker, Miss Spencer, Miss C. B. Baker, Mrs. L. E. Opdycke, Miss Ruth Lawrence and Miss Lida Clark Smith. Most exquisite music was rendered by the players from the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Gustav Strube. Among the guests present were Hon. and Mrs. Seth Low, Dr. and Mrs. Dennis, Mrs. Roger Wolcott, Miss Cobella Wolcott, [illegible] and Mrs. [illegible] 3d, Mrs. Fraser, Dr. and Mrs. Cornelius Smith, the Misses Smith, from Northeast Harbor; Rev. and Mrs. William Brown and Mrs. North from Seal Harbor and many of the well known Summer residents of Bar Harbor.

The next event in which society people will be interested is the annual horse show, which takes place August 22, 23 and 24. The prospects for the show are very bright and it would seem that it is to be the record show in the history of the Bar Harbor Fair Association. Not only have the managers received as many entries as last year but the class of horses is much better than has been shown here before.

The entries for the running races, which are a new feature in the Bar Harbor horse show, are coming in very fast. Already entries have been received from horse owners in New York, Hartford and Boston, to say nothing of the several race horses owned here in Bar Harbor.

There will be between three and five exciting races held during each day of the show, one of which will be a gentle steeplechase, running under Jockey Club rules, and with the regulation weights, jockey colors, etc. There will also be a half mile speed test for four in hands around the track. Not only this, but there will be a jumping class, to be contested over four jumps, arranged in front of the grand stand, for which a number of entries have been received.

The cups for the horse show, on exhibition in Livingston's window, make a glittering display. The donors are the Malvern Hotel, the Newport Hotel, the [illegible], La Comtesse de Laugier Villars, Mrs. [illegible] R. Burke, Mrs. Frederick Pearson, Mrs. Philip Livingston, Miss Bowdoin, Mrs. W. H. S. [illegible], General Merrell, W. Butler Duncan, Captain Thomas [illegible], Mrs. W. R. White, Mrs. Merle Middleton and Mrs. [illegible] M. Leeds.

A squash tournament is to be held at the cottage of Mrs. Hale at Schooner Head to-day. There are a number of fine squash players here, including Edgar Scott, who is said to be one of the best in the country and it is probable that the tournament will be a very interesting one.

General and Mrs. Edward Ripley gave a dinner at their cottage at Hulls Cove Friday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin McVeigh of Chicago. The other guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Bleecker Banks, General Horace Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wadsworth, [illegible] General Jas. H. Wilson, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop, Mrs. Farelly, Mr. Fuller and Miss Ripley.

On Saturday evening, Mr. and Mrs. John [illegible] of New York gave a very charming dinner at their cottage on the Ledge [illegible] road. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wadsworth, Miss Mildred Stimson, Miss Alice Van Rensselaer, Miss Hoffman, Miss Hopkins, Mr. Ingraham, Martin Van Buren, Mr. Fuller and Mr. Hopkins.

The [illegible] parade at the Swimming Pool on Monday evening was a very pleasing event and was enjoyed by a very large number of spectators who lined the walls of the pool and the adjacent grounds. The parade was under the direction of George [illegible] of Boston.

Late arrivals at the St. Sauveur are Frank P. Blake, Boston; Julian B. Strose, Francis Lothrop, New York; Mrs. Frank Webb, Boston; Miss Alice E. Purpage, Washington; Charles D. Grayson, Philadelphia; Mrs. Calvin Frost and Mrs. A. Stout, Peekskill; James B. Whittaker, Shenandoah, Pa.; Theo. S. West, New York; Arthur Butler of Morristown; Mr. and Mrs. J. McMichael, Buffalo; Carl Roberts, Philadelphia; Mrs. J. A. Beebe and Miss E. E. Beebe, Boston; C. H. Lang, Jr., E. C. Lang and Miss Martha D. Swazey, Boston; Dr. W. T. Blake, Springfield, Mass.

Bethlehem, N. H.

Bethlehem, N. H., Aug. 19.—The cotillon at Crawford's on Saturday evening was led by Stanley Hamilton Forde, the owner of "Woodland," who is well known in Boston, where he has played several long engagements.

Mrs. David P. Kimball is expecting her daughter, Mrs. J. Harsen Rhoades, home from Europe, and will welcome her with Mr. Rhoades at Profile.

John Kendrick Bangs is with Mrs. Bangs at the Profile House. Dr. Frederick Pearl of Boston is also there.

J. B. Leeson and Mrs. Leeson, her mother and their little daughter, are Summering at the Profile.

J. Russell May and Miss Dorothy May of Boston are guests at the Waumbek in Jefferson.

Hon. Jonquin Nabuco, the Brazilian Ambassador, and his guests, A. Valloso and General Shannon, are making a tour of the White Mountains, but will soon return to their cottage at Wentworth Hall in Jackson. The Chinese Ambassador is expected at one of the cottages there.

Madame Alice Estey, formerly of Boston, but now a noted singer in the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London, is a guest at the Crawford House, with a party of friends, including Miss Lida J. Low of the St. Botolph studios.

The Mt. Washington Hotel at Bretton Woods is entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. Rogers and Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Flagler. Mr. Flagler has his motor car here.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Rice, of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, are with Miss Mabel Rice and Charles Rice at the Mt. Washington Hotel, Bretton Woods. Mrs. Garret A. Hobart is entertaining her son's fiancee, Miss Caroline Howe Briggs, of Auburn, Me., who is the granddaughter of Senator Frye.

J. F. Hathaway, of Boston, whose motor accident a few weeks ago has kept him at the Mt. Washington House, is much better and will soon leave Bretton Woods.

Fred Thompson, of Boston, spent Sunday with Mrs. Thompson at the Crawford House, where there are many Bostonians this season. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. Jean Paul Selinger, the artists.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Martin, of Boston, are at the Hampshire Inn after a month's visit in Quebec.

Miss A. A. Richards, Miss Mary Scarlett, of Brookline, and Miss Alice Garland, of Gloucester, are at the Crawford House.

C. Allan Gilbert, the artist and illustrator, is spending a few weeks at the Crawford House.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, JRS., SADLY MISSED AT NEWPORT

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and Her Children.

(From a photograph recently taken)

The Charming Young Matron Who Has Been a Feature of Social Life in the Aristocratic Colony in Former Years, Is Winning New Triumphs Abroad This Summer.

Newport, Aug. 19.—Charming Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., is sadly missed in Newport this season. In former years the young Vanderbilts have been the centre of [illegible] social gayeties. This is due to the tact and personality of Mrs. Vanderbilt whose social triumphs have been the talk of two continents. Mrs. Vanderbilt before her marriage was Miss Grace Wilson, daughter of Mrs. James T. Wilson of New York. Her marriage to young "Corny" Vanderbilt caused the split in the Vanderbilt family which happily now is a thing of the past. The family feud [illegible] arose when Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., was cut off in his father's will with a paltry [illegible] or so, has been patched up and all branches of the family are now good friends.

Mrs. Vanderbilt is one of the most beautiful young matrons in society circles in New York and Newport to-day. Magnolia

Magnolia, Aug. 19.—The week has been a brilliant one at Magnolia despite the dull weather early in the week, and cottages all along this section are filled with house parties.

The most brilliant social event of the season, by far, was the floral fete and spielkartenfest at the Oceanside Thursday afternoon. From all parts of the North Shore came members of the Summer colony to take in the event, which was in aid of the Magnolia Improvement Association. Supplemented by a parade of decorated automobiles early in the afternoon, the day was indeed a busy one. Fully three thousand people took in the entertainment. The beautiful grass tennis court of the Oceanside served as a stage for the scores of pretty girls who took part in the entertainment, while the chairs and the soft grass ground served as orchestra seats and the tiers of piazzas as balconies for the impromptu theatre. A game of whist with [illegible] cards was [illegible] was played by [illegible] A. G. S. [illegible]wood, J. W. Kemble and Robert Bentley. The entire affair was in charge of Miss Margaret MacLaren Eager of Boston. Mrs. William Atherton of New York headed the long list of patronesses.

Among the young ladies who took part were Miss Margaret Curry, Miss Laura Hobson, Miss Alice Crittenden, Miss Harriet Johnston, Miss McAdoo, Miss Janet House, Miss Genevieve Gibbs, Miss Nellie Ellis, Miss Jessie Macdonald, Miss May Ruhl, Miss Daisy Colton, Miss Anna MacFadden, Miss Lyra B. Nickerson, Miss Helen Ayers, Miss Marjorie Colton, Miss Louise Brown and others.

Society was out again this afternoon in force for the fifth annual water carnival on the beach. This is always one of the events of the season, and society from all sections flock in large numbers to take in the event. Among those who contributed prizes for the event were Mrs. H. M. Curry, B. F. Kennard, George Wilshire, Dr. Chas. Wadsworth, Jr. The latter was also chairman of the committee in charge.

Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Van Nostrand of New York were among the early week arrivals at the New Magnolia.

Pride's Crossing

Pride's Crossing, Aug. 19.—Polo at the Myopia Hunt Club has been the attraction of the week in this section of the North Shore. The matches which started Thursday and will be continued into next week have attracted large numbers of the Summer contingent each afternoon. Frederick H. Prince, whose villa, Princemere, at Chebacco Lake, has been full of guests all week, is offering twenty four cups for the matches.

Paine place was the scene of a merry party Thursday, when Miss Sarah Paine had her Sunday school class of girls down from Boston for a day's outing. There were seventeen in the party.

Mrs. Albert Hayden of Boston gave a guessing game at the Pilgrim, where the Haydens are passing the Summer. The prize was won by Miss Leslie Reed of Canton.

Marthas Vineyard

Cottage City, Aug. 19.—Easterly storms have faithfully attended upon the Baptist camp meetings and destroyed much pleasure for resorters here this week. It was so wet, chilly and generally uncomfortable that a few people left for home. The New York Yacht Club's visit was postponed on account of the weather, baseball games at [illegible] were declared off, and in fact golf and bathing were the only outdoor sports that the weather did not prohibit.

J. Edward Barry, President of the Board of Aldermen of Cambridge, is enjoying an outing at the Wesley House.

Chairman Wm. E. McClintock and J. H. Manning of the State Highway Commission held a hearing at Edgartown Town Hall Tuesday upon a protest against a special regulation of the Selectmen of that town limiting the speed of automobiles and motor cycles to four miles an hour in the heart of the village, and to ten miles on any roads in the town. Francis Hurtubis, Jr., of Boston, attorney for the Massachusetts State Automobile Association, spoke against the regulation, as did Dr. B. R. Sims of Boston, an automobile owner, and E. E. Silvey, Cottage City, and C. H. Stahl of Fitchburg, chauffeurs. No decision was announced by the commission, but it is expected here that the Selectmen will be satisfied to place the limit nearer that allowed in the State regulations.

Among recent arrivals are: Fred Bellows, Wm. H. Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Rowley, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Smith and sons, W. E. C. Worth, W. O. Eddy, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. SSociety Is Looking Forward to Brilliant Functions Before Summer Season Closes

VACATION SEASON IS WANING; SHUTTERS ON THE TOWN HOUSES SOON WILL BE TAKEN DOWN

SOCIALLY, Boston never is dull. This Summer the exodus from the city has been as great, if not greater, than ever before and there is scarcely a Summer resort in the country that does not contain its quota of Bostonians who are always in the fore ranks of entertainers and entertained. Yet, notwithstanding this almost unprecedented exodus from the city for the heated term, there is a large number of stay-at-homes to whom Boston in the Summer time is not equalled by any watering place in the country. These stay-at-homes are busy with their usual social functions and society is thus kept busy the year around.

With the waning days of August, those who have been enjoying the Summer months at the sea shore, by the lakes and in the mountains will begin to think of turning their faces homeward. School will begin in September and the families where the little ones rule the household will be compelled to come back in order to allow the youngsters to go back to their studies.

The weather of the past week, which has been almost unprecedented for this season of the year, has started many who had not planned to return for a month or so back to the city.

Socially, in Boston, the coming season promises to be one of the liveliest in years. There are weddings almost without number scheduled. There will be a large numbers of debutantes who will make their first bows in Boston society, and in addition smart society women, whose entertainments are looked forward to with eager anticipation, are planning for more elaborate functions than ever before.

SOCIETY LOOKING FORWARD TO ANNUAL HORSE SHOW OF MYOPIA CLUB AT WENHAM

THE unprecedented rainy weather of the past week spoiled many of the fetes that were to have taken place in aid of different charitable institutions, and has been the means of sending the denizens of the beaches to the pure, life-giving air of the mountains.

Old Narragansett will put on its gala attire in honor of the annual horse show at the Point Judith County Club on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The horse show committee is composed of P. S. P. Randolph, Samuel A. Culbertson, Harry B. Kane, John B. Lewis, W. C. Marrow, Dr. Charles Hitchcock, Frank W. Moulton and Samuel H. Valentine.

Just around the corner of August looms the annual horse show of the Myopia Club at Wenham, which practically closes the season there. There have been a number of these events, each far more successful than its predecessor, and the show announced for September 4 will doubtless prove the most intertaining of all.

Not only the fashionable world of society, but the farmers and country people for miles around, come to applaud the various events, and among the brilliant and beautifully dressed people who enjoy the occasion from perfectly appointed carriages and coaches, one is very likely to find a farmer's family dressed in their best, in a carry-all driven by a farm horse whose days might have been of the pleasantest in the years of long ago. It is the law of contrast which draws the spectator to the Myopia horse show as much as the events that are to be seen inside the ring.

In all probability the Eben D. Jordans, heretofore important factors in these affairs, will not have returned from Scotland, where they are spending a holiday. There are still a number of society people who may be relied upon to put in an appearance, notably the Bryce J. Allans, who always arrive on their coach with friends, Mr. and Mrs. Washington E. Thomas and their two daughters, Mrs. Francis I. Amory and Miss Mary J. Amory, Mrs. George Lee, always handsomely gowned, and her eldest daughter, Miss Marie Lee; Mrs. John L. Thorndike and her two daughters, Miss Olivia Thorndike and Miss Alice Thorndike, who will be presented the coming season; Miss Hannah Stevenson, always an interesting spectator of horse shows, with her friend, Miss Rosamond Saltonstall; Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Agassiz, who always have a number of people with them, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Wrenn are to be depended upon to be there.

The Arabic brought over this week from their European honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Higginson, Jr., who went directly to Coolidge Point, Manchester-by-the-Sea, for the late Summer. All manner of hospitalities await the couple, and it is expected that life at Manchester will take on a new aspect until late in September. Mrs. Higginson was formerly Miss Hetty A. Sargent, one of the most prominent and stately of the June brides. Her wedding in Trinity Church was among the most brilliant ever celebrated in that edifice, and was attended by prominent society people of Boston, New York and Washington.

The judges for the Newport horse show were announced the past week, and are as follows: For harness classes, Henry Fairfax, of Aldil, Va.; J. W. Ogden of Morristown, N. J., and G. G. Haven, Jr., of New York. For saddle horses and hunters, Dr. C. Shirley Carter of Warrenton, Va., Austin Wadsworth of Geneseo, N. Y., and Adam Beck of Toronto, Canada. For polo ponies, William A. Hazard of New York.

Mr. Samuel Frothingham, who married a sister of Ambassador Meyer, and Dr. Richard C. Greenleaf are two of the committee for the annual chrysanthemum show at Lenox in which a number of Boston society people are interested. The Fall tournament at the Lenox Golf Club, set from August 28 to September 2, inclusive, will form an excuse for week end parties and a general interchange of hospitalities. As is usual during these tournaments, the Lenox and the Aspinwall will be crowded and there will be a number of dances. The Boston contingent at Lenox is not very large and is hopelessly depleted by the absence of the Bacons, Schencks and others.

North Shore society is rather depleted and the functions of the coming week will be without many men who generally take in all events of the season. Many of the men of the North Shore set belong to the New York Yacht Club and are therefore cruising with the club on their annual cruise.

Among the debutantes who are to make their bows in Boston society the coming season are some very handsome and attractive girls prominently connected with many old families of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Included in the group of girls are Miss Elisabeth Gray, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gray of Kingsbury street, Chestnut Hill, and a daughter of the late Patrick Grant. Miss Gray is exceptionally attractive and popular, and will doubtless have one of the most attractive presentations. Miss Mary B. Coffin, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Coffin of Ivy street, Brookline, and a very pleasing and lovable girl, is another. Miss Coffin has the honor of being a granddaughter of the late distinguished Francis Parkman.

Miss Elinor Quincy, second daughter of Mrs. Henry Quincy of Beacon street (born Adams), is still another. Miss Quincy has been very carefully educated and is exceedingly accomplished and winsome. She has spent some time abroad and bids fair to achieve much of the success attained by her elder sister, Miss Dorothy Quincy. Mrs. Quincy, with her daughters, are at Islesboro, and will remain until late in September, whence they will go to their country estate at Dedham until after Thanksgiving.

Miss Barbara Burr is another of the prominent debutantes of the coming Winter. Miss Burr is a very pretty and charming young lady, and is at present travelling abroad.

Miss Rosamond Dixey of Beacon street and Lenox, who was to have been one of the most important debutants of the coming season, has naturally withdrawn from the long list, owing to the recent death of her only brother, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, which occurred in Seoul. Everyone is expressing the utmost sympathy for Miss Dixey, who was devoted to her brother and shared many of his pleasures.

The al fresco fete in aid of the Roman Catholic Church at Newport will take place Thursday, September 7th. On this occasion Miss Florence Lyman of Walnut street and her niece, Miss Annie Lyman, are to give the use of their villa and grounds on Webster street. The Misses Lyman will have the assistance of some of the members of St. Mary's Church, and of the Rev. William Meehan, the pastor. Miss Lyman is noted for her charitable work and is a woman of great prominence in many Boston societies, which aid in bettering the conditions of the poor of the city.

Many pleasant things are being done for Miss Katharine Lawrence, only daughter of Prescott Lawrence, who is to be a debutante the coming season at Newport.

Mrs. T. S. Robbins and Miss Anna S. Robbins of Brookline will sail on the new Cunarder Slavonia August 29 for a trip to the Mediterranean. They will leave the ship at Naples to travel with friends through Italy.

Mrs. Mary F. Duddy of Somerville and her charming daughter, Miss Nettie M. Duddy, who have been visiting friends in Philadelphia, have gone to Atlantic City for a few days, whence they will go to Asbury Park. The Duddys will return early in September, stopping over in New York a few days while en route.

Bar Harbor is at the height of its season, and many have been the delightful entertainments and dances among the ultra-fashionables at this pleasant resort. The Louisburg is very gay just now, with its morning concerts by Symphony Orchestra men, led by Emil Fredler.

Automobiling at the North Shore is the favorite diversion of the hour, and among the recent converts to the fascinating pastime is the Hon. T. Jefferson Coolidge, who has recently become the possessor of a new Pierce touring car; Mr. Charles H. Tweed of New York, who is occupying Mrs. Henry Lee's cottage at Beverly Farms, has added to his belongings a fourteen horse-power Renault.

Magnolia always closes its season with a brilliant wedding, and this year will be no exception to the rule, for the nuptials of Miss Curry of Pittsburg and Mr. Charles A. Estabrook of Syracuse are announced for the latter part of the month. The Currys are for the first time occupying their recently completed country home at Magnolia, which is imposing and situated near the estate of Mrs. Charles R. Hayden of Beacon street. Mr. Curry at his death left an immense fortune, which his children are enjoying to the utmost. The two sons, Mr. Harry Curry and Mr. Grant Curry, are Harvard men, and the two daughters, the bride-elect and her sister are clever, interesting girls. The Curry house is gay in honor of the approaching ceremony, and a number of young people, including Mr. Estabrook, are being entertained by Mrs. Curry.

A charming reception and luncheon was given the past week by Mrs. George A. Huhn at her villa on Webster street, Newport, in honor of Miss Mary Sands, who is to become the bride of Lorrillard Spencer, Jr., September 19th. The wedding promises to be one of the events of the season and is being eagerly looked forward to by the cottagers.

The event of the social week at Magnolia, North Shore, was the fair at the Oceanside Casino, on Wednesday last, in aid of the Magnolia Protection and Improvement Society. The fashionable set came from far and near despite the inclement weather and the affair was a brilliant success. Mrs. James S. Lee of Brimmer street, this city, was in charge of the fair and she was ably assisted by a bevy of handsome society girls, who waited on the various booths. Miss Mona House, of Austin, Texas, whose engagement to Randolph Tucker, of Boston, was announced last week poured tea at one of the booths and was assisted by a number of children in very cute attire.

The marriage ceremony of Mr. Paul Thompson Haskell of Savannah and Miss Ruth Wilder, which was solemnized last Tuesday at Barre, was one of the prettiest weddings of the season. Miss Wilder is a very charming girl and comes from New York, being the daughter of Mr. Harold Wilder.

The rain on Wednesday interferred with the weekly band concert at the Essex Country Club, and society was kept away for the first time this season.

Polo matches still continue to draw large crowds of the smart set to the Myopia Hunt Club, where Mr. Frederick Prince is offering six handsome cups for the winners. The matches will last until the middle of this week.

Wednesday morning saw the marriage of Walter S. Barnes, Jr., and Hulda J. Oliver at the home of the groom, No. 17 Ivy street, Boston, before immediate relatives only. The ceremony was performed by Rev. William H. Pierson of Somerville. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes, after a brief honeymoon, will reside at No. 17 Ivy street.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hunnewell of Beacon street are passing a few weeks at the Profile House, White Mountains.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Leeson of Commonwealth avenue, with the latter's mother, Mrs. Alfred P. Dix of New York, are pleasantly established at the Profile House. Mrs. Leeson is every bit as charming as in the old days when she was Mildred Dix, one of the foremost belles of New York, and her infant daughter bids fair to have inherited her good looks.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Cumnock and Miss Cumnock, who have been staying in London for a few weeks have continued their travels into Scotland. Mrs. Cumnock was formerly Miss Mary P. Cutting of New York and Pittsfield, and is quite as popular as her husband, who in his college days at Harvard captained a winning 'varsity eleven.

Mrs. Henry C. DeRham, Jr., has joined her husband's family at their beautiful country home "Glen" at Cold Spring, New York, for a short visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Richmond of Boylston street are among the latest arrivals at Islesboro, where they intend to remain until the first of September.

Bishop William McVickar and his sister, Miss McVickar, who have been traveling on the continent, were last heard from in Paris. The McVickars are returning to America the last of August, and will pass September at their Pride's Crossing residence.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Wrenn (Grace Dabney), are due to arrive the middle of the month from London, and will go to Nahant for a few weeks visit to Mrs. Wrenn's parents.

The Hon. and Mrs. J. Albert Walker and their only daughter, Miss Mabel Walker, are at the Wentworth, Newcastle, N. H., where they intend to remain until the hotel closes.

Announcement has just been made of the engagement of Miss Helen Battelle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Battelle, of Marlboro street, to Mr. James Taylor Souther, 2d, a son of Mr. James Taylor Souther of New York, and a graduate of Harvard '04. The announcement is calling forth innumerable felicitations, for Miss Battelle is a very attractive and popular girl.

Many pleasant things have been done for Miss Seabury of Marlboro street, who is summering at the Woodstock Inn, Woodstock, Vt., chaperoned by her mother, Mrs. Charles W. Seabury. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury, still loyal in their allegiance to the North Shore, are at their Beverly Farms cottage, where Mr. Seabury is taking his usual interest in affairs relating to the Myopia Club, of which he is a prominent member.

Mrs. David Prescott Hall has joined her sister, Mrs. Maude Howe Elliott, and her mother, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, at the latter's beautiful country home, "Oak Glen," near Newport, where she is to spend the remainder of the Summer.

Miss Florence Lyman of Walnut street and her niece, Miss Annie Lyman, who makes her home with her aunt, have tendered the use of their spacious grounds and villa on Webster street, Newport, for a bazaar for the benefit of St. Margaret's Roman Catholic Church at Newport, to be held the last of this month. Arrangements are being made, and the affair bids well to be one of the most brilliant events of the season.

Mrs. A. Forbes Conant of Arlington street and her sister, Miss Helen Burrell McNichol, have closed their beautiful country home at Nahant and have gone to Bar Harbor for a short stay, later returning to Nahant before coming into town for the Fall season.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Tweed of New York and Miss Tweed have as their guest at their Beverly Farms villa Miss Loraine Roosevelt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. West Roosevelt of New York, whose Summer home, "Waldeck," is at Oyster Bay.

Miss Leila Burnett of Southboro, whose Winter home is at the Victoria, is the guest of her friend, Miss Lucy Blair, at West Manchester. Miss Burnett is a charming blonde and is universally liked by young and old.

Following an extended absence abroad Mrs. Richard Price Hallowell has returned to her attractive home at West Medford.

Mrs. F. L. Hayward whose Winter home is at the Somerset, is among the latest arrivals at the Mount Pleasant House, White Mountains, where she will be joined shortly by Mr. Hayward.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene V. R. Thayer, Jr., who have been spending the Summer at Lancaster as the guests of Mr. Thayer's parents have gone to Newport for their usual visit to Mrs. Thayer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks.

Mr. Eben Wright of the Somerset Club and Mrs. Wright have as their guest at their attractive villa on Nahant road, Mrs. Walden Pell for whom many pleasant things are being done.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner B. Williams of Brookline have taken apartments at the New Ocean House, Swampscott, for a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Baylies of Commonwealth avenue and their picturesque little family are spending the Summer very quietly at their pretty country villa "Oxbow," at Taunton, where they intend to remain until November.

Mrs. Prescott Bigelow of Bay State road has enlivened the pleasures at Manchester Cove by giving a number of luncheons and dinners to her many friends at her new and picturesque villa.

Mr. Frank Gair Macomber, Jr., who has recently returned from abroad, will spend the remainder of the season with his parents at their beautiful estate at Marblehead. Mr. Macomber shares his father's love for yachting and will doubtless spend much time on his boat "Chewink IV."

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Moulton of Beacon street, who are occupying the Ober cottage at Beverly Farms, have gone on an automobile trip to the Berkshires which will probably extend to the Adirondacks.

Miss Blanche Shimmins of Commonwealth avenue, on her return to town in the Fall, has decided to take a house in Longwood, having tired of hotel life, which she has led since the death of her mother a couple of years ago. Miss Shimmins is at present staying at the club house, Isle-au-Haute, off the Maine coast.

Miss Ethel Chase of Seaver street, Roxbury, is to be one of the Fall brides, and among her attendants will be Miss Lillian N. Baldwin, who is the favorite niece and namesake of Mme. Nordica, and who is at present travelling abroad with her, has arranged to return to America for the occasion.

Mrs. Amos P. Tapley of the Vendome and her daughter, Miss Alice Tapley, since the death of Mr. Tapley in the Spring, have been passing the Summer very quietly at Petersham.

BEAUTIFUL COUNTESS OF WARWICK MAKES SOCIALIST SPEECH TO MINERS

The Countess of Warwick as an Orator.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—The Countess of Warwick, England's leading aristocrat-socialist, has added to her fame as a friend of the working people and to her laurels as a public speaker by two notable addresses she has just delivered. One was before a meeting of coal miners and the other at Founders' Day anniversary of the Lady Warwick Agricultural College for Ladies.

The beautiful Countess, for even in her forty-fourth year she is regarded as one of the most beautiful women in the British empire, looked the picture of aristocratic loveliness at both meetings. Gowned in white, with a costly white feather boa and big picture hat, she faced her critical audiences composedly and spoke earnestly of what she hoped and intended to do for the Socialist cause. She pleased the miners particularly by her little joke about being years and years older than John Burns, the famous labor M. P.

"For I am a grandmother," she said, "while he is but a father."

Not only is the fair Countess a grandmother at forty-four, but she has a baby [illegible], Lady Avril, born when her mother had passed her forty-third birthday. Her actual seniority over John Burns is only three years, so the point of the joke was not lost on the appreciative miners.

ENGLISH QUEEN HAS ELEPHANT FOR PET.

Jumbo Junior Trots After Her Like a Poodle and Wins Social Triumph—Plays the Mouth Organ and Dances

NO SOCIAL FUNCTION COMPLETE WITHOUT HIM

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—The baby elephant at the Royal Italian Circus, whose professional name is Jumbo Junior, made his debut in March last, and his first season has been one long triumph. He has, indeed, become so much the vogue that it is doubtful whether any function could be considered smart without Jumbo Junior to hand round the ices or to conduct the orchestra.

His triumph came when the King commanded his presence at Buckingham Palace to assist in the celebration of Princess Victoria's birthday. The boy Princes were delighted with him, and the Queen fed him with sweets, cakes and bananas until he became her sworn friend and refused to leave her side.

With great difficulty he was eventually persuaded to mount his little tub, and was given his mouth organ. But music had lost its charm for Jumbo. He quietly left the tub and walked back to the Queen's seat, where he remained for the rest of the afternoon. When the Queen left her chair Jumbo trotted with her like a poodle.

Since then the baby elephant has been known as "The Queen's Pet," and his society engagements are now so numerous that Signor Volpi complains that instead of being Jumbo's trainer, he appears to be his secretary.

Jumbo Junior is the smallest elephant that has ever visited Europe. He is good-looking—for an elephant—and has many accomplishments. He plays the mouth-organ and, wearing a large pair of spectacles, conducts a full orchestra of ten pony musicians. He dances with ease and grace, and will eat cakes or fruit with enthusiasm whenever the opportunity offers. He is always learning new tricks.

NEW YORK GIRL ROUTS THIEVES AT MIDNIGHT.

AMERICANS SINGLED OUT AS VICTIMS

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—The holiday season is bringing with it more than the usual amount of complaints in regard to thefts on the Channel boats and in the Continental trains.

Americans appear to be singled out by these expert thieves. Miss Evelyn Bigelow, daughter of Mrs. Poultney Bigelow of New York, narrowly escaped being a victim when she crossed the channel the other night en route for Schwalbach, where she is now undergoing the cure for anaemia, which is the polite word for having been to too many parties during the London season.

In the small hours Miss Bigelow discovered two men in her "special cabin." Most girls would have screamed loudly and allowed the thieves to get off with everything, but Miss Bigelow kept her head and stretched out her hand to the bell, pretending to be asleep.

Unfortunately she could not see the faces of the men, who had noticed her movements and fled, and by the time the steward arrived she had decided to make no fuss about it, as it would have been impossible to identify the thieves. On the Continental trains many travellers absolutely decline to sleep and remain awake all night watching over their valuables.

Schwalbach is full just now of women with pale complexions, who pass their time between German doctors and the waters, occasionally varied with picnic parties and a few tame dances.

URGES IRISH TO KEEP OUT OF ARMY.

Aim of Michael Davitt Is to Hit the Government in Its Most Vital Spot and to Let England Find Own Soldiers

ISSUES AN APPEAL TO HIS COUNTRYMEN

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Dublin, Aug. 19.—While the Irish Nationalist party in the House of Commons is, by skilful parliamentary tactics, hastening the present Tory Government to its downfall, here in Ireland the Government is made equally unhappy by the irritatingly effective work of such patriotic men as Michael Davitt.

In Ireland the aim of the Irish patriot is to hit the Government in one of its most vital spots—the army. A campaign is now being waged to prevent England obtaining recruits for the army in Ireland.

In a speech at Tullow, Mr. Davitt, recalling his work as a special newspaper commissioner in Russia, said that he learned, when in Helsingfors, that not a single Finn to-day is to be found in the ranks of the Russian army.

Why, he asked, should any Irishman join the English army? Could any honest, self-respecting Irishman offer a solitary reason why the same army is, or ought to be, one iota less objectionable to young Irishmen than the Russian army is to the men of Finland?

Decent English artisans will not enter their own country's army. In England it is a rule in the management of respectable public houses not to serve uniformed "Tommies" with refreshments, owing to the disrepute in which they are held.

For every reason, therefore, they ought to influence young Irishmen to avoid a degrading anti-Irish service. They are called upon to let England find her own soldiers in her own country with whom to carry out the infamous crimes like that of the South African war.

KNIGHTS BATTLE IN BRUSSELS TOURNEY.

$400,000 IS SPENT ON ONE OF FEATURES ALONE

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Brussels, Aug. 19.—Fifteen thousand people witnessed this week's performance in the mediaeval tournament by which is being celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of Belgian independence.

Not less than $400,000 has been spent by the Government in the great battle of the knights alone, this representation of the famous jousts given by Philip the Good of Burgundy in 1452 being repeated.

The immense Hall du Cinquantenaire was crowded and the magnificent performance was successfully carried out.

The tournament was in preparation for two years and for three months daily rehearsals took place. Every detail was ordered according to the ancient chronicles recording the jousts of 1452.

The dresses of the actors were of the richest materials, the designs being beautifully embroidered, coats and arms were worked on the horses' gay caparisons, the harness was set with glittering stones and the armor used was gathered either from museums or specially made. There were over a thousand performers, and at one moment more than half were before the spectators.

At each end of the hall were two camps, the one for Philip's son, the Comte de Charolais, afterward Charles the Bold, in whose honor the tournament was given, and the other for such knights as opposed him in the fray, and specially for Adolphe of Cleves, who headed the cortege of chevaliers come to do combat with the Comte and his followers.

Even the jesters of the ancient pageant were not omitted from the spectacle. They kept the spectators as much amused by their antics as did their prototypes long ago.

American visitors witnessed the performance and lent color and gayety to the ment ring, but, after all, it is such throngs.

Protest in Vain Against the Long, Flinty Loaves and Form Club to Force the Restaurateurs to Yield

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—An amusing club has been formed of quite an original nature among certain noblemen and gentlemen of Paris. In the fashionable restaurants, as in the more modest ones, the only bread offered to clients is the long, crusty batonlike articles known as "flutes," which, if you have not the toughest of teeth, are apt to play havoc with them.

Diners at the fashionable restaurants ask in vain for the humbler, softer and tastier "pain de menage" (household bread). It is not considered chic form to supply it. Consequently a number of gentlemen, rebelling at this autocratic decision, have formed themselves into a club to force the restaurateurs to supply them with pain de menage.

Before resorting to their favorite restaurants, [illegible] Paillard, La Tour d'Argent, [illegible] Cafe Anglais, they go the rounds to a [illegible] their own household bread and march triumphantly with it under their arms to the restaurants kept by men whose hearts are only less stony than the crusts they supply. Among the members of this "anti-flute club" are such well-known men as the Prince de Sagan, Baron de Fonteuillat, the well known American sportsman Fowell Brisbane, James Burke Roche and others.

HUSBAND'S VOICE CAUGHT BURGLARS

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—A lady who lives in the Rue d'Allemagne is the wife of a [illegible] skipper, who is frequently away on long voyages. In order a little to mitigate the tedium of his long absences, the sailor boy, before his departure had bought her a gramophone into which he had sung a number of nautical and other ditties dear to his sailor's heart. The other day the lone, lorn wife went away to pay a few days' visit in the country, and during her absence burglars broke into the house and stole a number of things, including the gramophone. The lady, in spite of all the efforts of the police to trace the miscreants, had resigned herself to her loss, when, one morning walking through a street in La Villette she heard, from a cellar her husband's voice singing a French equivalent of "Tom Bowling." She quickly made her way to the nearest police station, and the officials who accompanied her back arrested three or four men who had been enjoying the absent tar's songs. They were the burglars.

PHOTOGRAPY FINE ART, COURTS DECIDE

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—A Paris court has decided that photography is a fine art, and that there exists copyright against reproduction. M. Nadar is the well-known Paris photographer who "takes" all the celebrities and professional beauties. A portrait of a musical celebrity, from a negative of M. Nadar, was reproduced in a French paper, the editor of which refused to accede to the photographer's claim that the portrait in question was his copyright, and must be paid for.

The editor's counsel contended that photography was not a fine art, and that no copyright could be claimed by its author, inasmuch as it was not mentioned in the French copyright law, in 1793—when photography did not exist—nor in the amendment to it in 1902. The court, however, decided that in the case of a photographer who has achieved a certain celebrity some amount of personal talent enters into his work and awarded him ten dollars damages.

KING, IN A MILITARY UNIFORM, OFFENDS NAVY OFFICER.

Edward's Groom Cause of All the Trouble Which Required All the Tact of the British Monarch to Straighten Out

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—King Edward, notwithstanding his tact, occasionally offends a few of his subjects. The other day, for instance, when His Majesty visited the new naval hospital at Chatham, navy officials were indignant because His Majesty wore a military uniform. As a matter of fact, it was the fault of the King's groom of the chambers, who ordered the wrong uniform.

It was a very hot day, and the King, when he found the mistake which had been made, was in a very bad temper, and only smiled when the cheery naval officers suggested iced champagne.

On the return journey from the hospital His Majesty's usual affability returned and he turned to one of the officers and said: "I'm afraid I've been a little upset to-day. I shouldn't mind trying some of that excellent iced champagne of yours again." And the rest of the ceremony passed off splendidly.

There is trouble again in store for the King. His Majesty has given deep offence in Edinburgh because, after promising to inspect the Scottish Volunteers in the third week in September, he has decided to remain in Edinburgh only a few hours. The inhabitants of the Scottish cities declare that the King will never stay with them if he can help it. They are right. It is an open secret that the King does not hanker after the "dour Scotch ceremonies."

AERONAUT MAY BEAT PEARY TO THE POLE

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—"If Commodore Peary wants to be the first man to reach the North Pole he had better hurry," said M. Marcillac at the French Aeronaut Club the other night, "or I may still beat him."

It is the intention of M. Marcillac to imitate the Swede Andree and attempt to reach the pole in a balloon. This balloon, which is now nearly finished, will in many ways be superior to that of Professor Andree.

In the first place it will be dirigible, containing, as it does, an electric motor which, when fully charged, will be able to run 600 hours or about twenty-five days. M. Marcillac will also carry with him a complete wireless telegraph outfit, so that he will be able to keep in close touch with civilization all the time.

The explorer expects to start on his trip early next Spring, and starting from one of the islands near Spitsbergen, he hopes to reach the pole and return to his starting point inside of twenty-five days.

ODESSA RUSSIAN TROOPS IN FRENZY TEAR GENERAL TO PIECES LONDON FAIR AMERICANS ARE NOW REAL LEADERS OF SOCIETY PARIS FRENCH CAPITAL WILL BE FAMOUS HEALTH RESORT BERLIN

'YANKEE' WOMEN RULE LONDON SOCIETY.

Dominance of Fair Americans Is Most Striking Feature of Social Season Which Has Just Closed in World's Metropolis

FOREIGNERS' SUCCESS IS CAUSE OF MERRY ROW

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—The dominance of [illegible] ture of the social season just closed, [illegible] oration they have infused into almost all society functions during the last few months.

No great affair has been complete without the presence of the leading American women in London. Whereas a few years ago Americans were "climbers" after social recognition, this year they have been sought after.

The success by American women has developed among themselves a rivalry and bitterness that is the talk of English society. It has recalled to English society the social feud which raged a dozen years ago between two American women striving to gain entrance within the portals of exclusive society. American women then, instead of aiding, sought to impede each other's progress.

Policy of Non-Interference.

The realization of the harmful effects of this policy upon all Americans desiring to "break into" London's social life was quickly appreciated by the Americans themselves; the feud ceased and the present policy of non-interference and co-operation was instituted.

The beneficial results of this course have been apparent during recent years when Americans of humblest origin, who were "nobodies" at home, have been welcomed "above the salt" of the most exclusive families.

The support of Americans to each other in the battle for recognition and their refusal to say anything but the kindest things about one another, coupled with their natural adaptability and social graces, caused London society to exclaim "what charming Americans!"

The advent of Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Potter Palmer this season threatens to overthrow this happy condition. Adherents of these two women have divided themselves into hostile camps and impolite tongues have been wagging overtime this season.

Mrs. Potter Palmer's success has aroused the fiercest resentment among the New York set. Why the King should invite her to take a house in London; why the King should make so much of the widow of a Chicago tavern keeper, ask her to luncheon at Ascot and Buckingham Palace, visit her house in London and at Cowes, is incomprehensible to the members of the New York "Four Hundred."

All Very Well in Chicago.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, they contend, is all very well in Chicago, but in New York she does not amount to much socially, and New York's "Four Hundred," to their minds, should be the sole determining factor of an American's position in London's social world.

Mrs. Potter Palmer is well aware of the antagonism her success has created, but she serenely pursues her victorious path, and those in her confidence say if the gage of battle is thrown down she will not hesitate to accept the combat, confident in her resources that she will put her opponents to rout, or at least emerge undefeated.

After a series of brilliant entertainments at Hampden House and being received and seen everywhere [illegible] a society leader should be Mrs. Palmer brings her season to a culmination in glory at Cowes, where she occupies Egypt House. Egypt House is in itself the hall mark of social eminence. It is the favorite visiting place of the King, Queen and members of the royal family during the famous regatta week, and this year under Mrs. Potter Palmer's adroit management, the noted house is more enjoyable than ever to His Majesty. Last year Consuelo, Dowager Duchess of Manchester, entertained the King at Egypt House.

Social War of the Roses.

Unless a compromise is reached this antagonism between social Chicago and social New York will become intense by next season, and it is likely that Americans in London society will be divided into two bitter factions, definitely aligned, ready to battle in this social war of the roses, the opening guns of which have been so vigorously [illegible] this year.

At Mrs. Potter Palmer's last dinner of the season at Hampden House she had forty guests, including Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Lord Clarendon, the Lord Chamberlain of England; Lord Kintore, Lord and Lady Cheylesmore, Lord Athlumney and Mrs. Adair.

TWO WEARY POETS BECOME MERCHANTS

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—What becomes of the poets of a few years ago of whom we hear nothing more to-day? The answer to this question has just been given in some interesting communications about poets who have turned merchants, by two of their number.

A poet, who was very well known in literary circles in Paris fifteen years ago, and showed promise of making a great name, wearied of the struggle, and is now following the occupation of a vine keeper. This is M. Armand Cabrol, who has issued an amusing circular containing the following: "Having left Paris, where I exercised the unlucrative profession of lyrical poet, in company with several others, among whom the most distinguished was my great friend, Verlaine, who died in misery—but he had the excuse of genius—I have returned to the paternal estate, from whence I send the best products." Another vine grower is M. Auguste Chauvigne, the author of "Le Bonheur de Mourir."

"BRAVEST WOMAN IN ALL ENGLAND," SAYS KING EDWARD TO MRS. ARTHUR PAGET

Mrs. Arthur Paget,

Who is slowly recovering from the effects of terrible fall down an elevator well over a year ago.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—"The bravest woman in all England" is the royal praise bestowed by King Edward upon Mrs. Arthur Paget for her fortitude during the successive operations that followed her fearful fall down an elevator well a year ago.

The King said this to Mrs. Paget at a dinner at which Mrs. Paget was being congratulated for surviving not only the injuries she received in her fall, but the operations which she endured later. After the broken bones were set the settings had to be broken, as they had not been done properly. Then, after the bones knit together, terrible operations were necessary. And Mrs. Paget, conscious through much of this surgery, bore the pain like a heroine. She winced, but did not let her agony cause any cessation of the racking treatment.

She displayed the courage and high-born self-command that has been related of her ever since England ever heard of her. As Minnie Stevens, daughter of Mrs. Paran Stevens of New York, she was noted for her courage and daring, either in athletic or social lines. Her unflinching bravery was again evinced in her latest sufferings.

Three years ago Mrs. Paget underwent a severe operation for spinal trouble, of which she was cured. Then on August 2, 1904, as she started into the elevator at her home, No. 35 Belgrave square, she fell down the elevator well, not noticing that the car was at the floor above. She broke both ankles, her left leg and her right thigh, the latter in two places.

Sir Frederick Treves, who took charge after the preliminary settings, insisted on breaking all the settings. The pain was terrific. Then, after the bones knit, came endless massaging, as it was feared that one leg would be shorter than the other. This massaging was exceedingly painful. Mrs. Paget went to Berlin for additional treatment, and the German specialists were even more severe than Sir Frederick had been.

The stories that came from Mrs. Paget's sick room of how she had borne these agonies prompted the King's warm praise just quoted.

LORD CURZON'S SALE OF CASTLE RELICS ANGERS DEAL.

Residents Thought They Ought to Go to Museum, and as a Result Declined to Bid, and the Prices Ruled Low

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—Lord Curzon, who is the most unpopular warden of Walmer Castle the people of Deal ever have known, did not realize much from the auction he caused to be held of some of the historic belongings of the castle. The people of Deal thought these ought to have been given to the Museum, but they didn't expect any such generosity from the man who closed up a path they had used for decades and who compelled them to remove their bathing boxes from the shore fronting Walmer Castle. The people of Deal would not bid and prices ruled low.

Most of the furniture had been removed from bedrooms occupied by the late Queen Victoria, Lord Nelson, the Duke of Wellington and William Pitt, but even the glamour of these names did not induce spirited bidding.

The highest price realized was £9 for an antique mahogany wardrobe. A small copper warming pan said to have been used in Queen Victoria's bedroom fetched no more than 5s.

A fish kettle which bore the initials of William Pitt was sold for 32s., and a stewpan bearing the crest and initials of the Duke of Wellington fetched 1s. more.

Some amusement was caused by the production of a Wellington bowl, which was used for serving baked potatoes in their skins; for this the best offer was 32s. A small presentation picture to Lady Granville representing the launch of the Walmer lifeboat, fetched 16s.

A DUKE'S VELASQUEZ CAUSES DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.

Art Critic Drops His Purse Behind It, Regains His Treasure Only When Owner Comes to Claim Painting

BY HENRI PENE DU BOIS.

Special to the Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 19.—Duke de Dino has bought a Velasquez, the portrait of an Infanta, in a gown of golden cloth. For it he paid only $8,000.

"The price you paid for it gives it away," I said. "It is a counterfeit."

"Henri Rochefort offers me $24,000 for it," the Duke replied. "I ask $100,000. The picture may have been stolen by the Spaniard that sold it to me."

Henri Rochefort is an expert on pictures. The Duke of Dino sent the Velasquez to him for analysis. Rochefort is a martyr to pains in the stomach. To allay them he drinks a potion. Over the Velasquez he threw his coat, when the pains seized him, and ran [illegible] for his potion.

Rochefort drank his potion and went to the Hotel Drouot. When he wished to pay for the picture he had bought his pocketbook was gone. It contained $4,200 in bills and a check for $1,200. There was a tumult. The Commissary of Police was told of the loss. Rochefort returned dejected to his home. The Duke de Dino was there.

"I have come to take my Velasquez," said the Duke.

"Oh, very well!" replied Rochefort. "Increase the sum of my mishaps."

"You see my Velasquez is authentic," exclaimed the Duke. "It has already caused a tragedy. All authentic, valuable things—jewels, art objects, gold—cause grief."

WIDOW WINS $200,000 IN LOTTERY

PARIS TO LEAD ALL AS HEALTH RESORT.

French Capital This Summer Has Drawn 30,000 Tourists to Undergo a Water Cure at Chantilly and Versailles

HEALING SPRINGS HAVE BEEN SUDDENLY FOUND

By the Marquis de Castellane.

Paris, Aug. 19.—Paris a watering place! It has been on the tapis for a long time, and for about six weeks it has been a fact, and people have been coming to take the waters as they have long done at Aix or Vichy. Suddenly, the doctors have discovered healing springs at Chantilly and at Versailles, which are now added to the springs at Enghien, long known for their rich thermal virtues. Each morning train loads leave with elegant water drinkers or seekers of fresh air on their way to the park of the Grand Conde or that planted by Louis XIV.

The number of French people who have come to Paris this year to undergo a water cure is estimated at some 30,000, and the fashion has been led by the most prominent people in Paris circles. The Duc and Duchesse de Fezensac leave Paris each morning to continue their cure at Versailles, the Count and Comtesse Aymery de la Rochefoucauld are staying at Enghien, while Vicomte and Vicomtesse d'Harcourt spend their time at Chantilly and its umbrageous surroundings. And in the evening the lights of this new movement [illegible] the gay and brilliant [illegible].

Paris will soon be the first watering place in the world.

[illegible] artists, actresses or singers of renown and rarely miss an opportunity of placing themselves on line with them. We call this "cabotinage"—what the Anglo-Saxon would call being stage struck. It is an essentially French malady, and in high society we are in fact so intoxicated by it that it governs all our acts almost without our knowledge—so much so that it [illegible] dictates the choice of the resorts [illegible] the Summer [illegible] one who can [illegible] [illegible] as soon as the [illegible] arrives to have herself sent by her doctor to drink or bathe in the waters of Mont d'Or, which is the rendezvous of all the relaxed throats in the world. And there the curious spectacle is witnessed of Marquises and Duchesses feeling themselves stricken with the same malady in order to be confused by the public in the same category as the actresses and singers. And as is the case at the present moment, the Vicomtesse de Tredern walks arm in arm with Mademoiselle Breval of the Opera, or the Comtesse de Guerne makes the halls of the Casino ring each evening with her impassioned [illegible] in response to those of Jean de Reszke. For the time actresses are taken for princesses and marchionesses for artists, and all are pleased with their game of make-believe.

COMMUNE COMING, CZAR IS DOOMED, SAYS JOUBERT.

"Romanoffs Will Go Down Together, All Russia Will Be Fighting, Heads Will Be on Trees," Declares Author

Special Cable to Sunday American.

[illegible] Aug. 19.—There can be no peace [illegible] now in Russia. From the Baltic to the Black Sea Russia is mad—mad with misgovernment and brutality and [illegible].

"When 140,000,000 people are mad together there can be no peace. There must be paroxysms and slaughter before there can be peace in Russia."

Carl Joubert, the author of the remarkable books on Russia recently purchased, uttered this gloomy forecast in the course of an interview yesterday.

"Within the last few weeks I have been in Russia," he said, "and I have seen that a peaceful revolution cannot be. From one end of Russia to the other there is butchery and bloodshed. But very soon there will be far worse.

"There will soon be scenes in Russia with which the French Revolution will not compare for horror. In Paris the cry was, 'A la lanterne!' In Russia the heads will be on the trees. There is no power in Russia that can stop the chaos that is near.

"The Czar is an autocrat. He can do what he chooses; he can stop the bloodshed now. But he is ruled by the Romanoffs of the past. Not his crimes, but the crimes of his ancestors have made him harden his heart. Therefore I say he is the last of his race. Not a Romanoff will [illegible].

"Hundreds of thousands of Russians have left Russia in the last few months. They see the horrors ahead. They know that as soon as Czardom is thrown down, as it will [illegible] power to take its place.

"The mutiny in the Black Sea is only part of the general revolution. The Crimea is rising. Poland has still to be reckoned with. Finland will fight for its freedom.

"I am no associate of bomb-throwers. I prefer open hostilities. But if the Czar were doomed I should know of his coming fate. Why is he not attacked. Because at present the bureaucratic Government would remain, and it would be a useless sacrifice of life. If a man I know in Russia lifted his finger to-morrow nothing could save the Czar's life. But it would do no good; and so the Czar goes unhurt.

"Yet sooner than any one imagines the bureaucracy and the Romanoffs will go down together. All Russia will be fighting, one party against another. The war between Russia and Japan will be as nothing to the horrors that will be seen in Russia itself."

DROPS HER SWITCH INTO THE SOUP

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—German coiffeurs are in high glee. The Crown Princess Cecelia is dressing in a new and highly original chignon, and all the ladies of the aristocracy, and after them the bourgeoise, are imitating her. The one difficulty is that very few women are so well endowed with hair as the young princess, and the consequence is that artificial coils are fetching huge prices. The new fashion has disadvantages, but these can be overcome in time. At a court dinner last week a maid of honor dropped her chignon into the soup and was carried out in hysterics as the result.

RUSS GENERAL IS KILLED BY HIS OWN TROOPS.

Infuriated Soldiers Fall Upon Him After He Has Shot a Corporal Dead and Wounded a Commander

WAS LITERALLY TORN TO PIECES BY MOB

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Odessa, Aug. 19.—A remarkable letter received from a soldier in the Seventy-first (Bieavsky) Regiment, stationed at Novo-Alexandria, Province of Lublin, is reported to have been received here, relating how the commander of the brigade, Major-General Remis, was literally torn to pieces by the regiment after he had brutally murdered a corporal.

The general appeared before the regiment and explained that the Fourteenth Army Corps, of which the regiment is a part, had been ordered to the front. He added, however, that he could not accompany the corps to the front.

Then there were cries of "Scoundrel!" and "Coward!" from the ranks.

"Approaching our company," writes the writer, "where on the right flank stood the company commander and a corporal, he pointed his revolver at the latter and demanded: 'Tell me immediately, you reptile, who shouted among your men.' The corporal replied that nobody in our company had shouted.

"'You lie, you dog,' returned the General, and fired. The corporal fell dead.

"Not satisfied with this the General aimed at him a second time and fired, but the bullet missed him, hitting instead the company commander, who also staggered and fell on the spot. It is impossible to comprehend what happened then. Like tigers the soldiers threw themselves upon him, and in less than a minute all that remained of the brilliant General was shapeless mutilated flesh.

"The commanders of the Seventy-first and Seventy-second Regiments called on the Cossacks, but when the latter fell upon the men the soldiers met them with a volley from nearly one thousand rifles. When the dust had settled there were stretched on the ground about thirty Cossacks, besides [illegible] the commander of the Seventy-second Regiment was killed and our own commander was left wounded in the breast. He was removed from the scene by an officer, as not a single soldier would stir from his place.

"On the next day there arrived from Lublin the Commander-in-Chief of the division, Lieutenant-General Smirnoff, who, after a long and persuasive speech, succeeded in recovering the body of the murdered General from the soldiers."

ENGLISH WOMEN ARRAIGNED BY A WOMAN.

Mrs. Ruth Jackson Boldly Says They Are Worst Housekeepers in the World—She Gives Her Reasons Very Plainly

DETERIORATION IS DUE TO LACK OF HOUSEWORK

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 19.—The papers are filled with discussions of the question, "Are English Wives Thriftless?" It is boldly stated by hundreds of English husbands that they are, and that they are, in addition, bad cooks and extravagant housekeepers.

Now comes Mrs. Ruth Jackson, who declares in the Nineteenth Century that "the Englishwoman of to-day is the worst housekeeper in the world, while 200 years ago she was the best."

Mrs. Jackson attributes the present notorious decay of the domestic virtues in England to the equally notorious physical degeneration of the masses of the English people.

"We find the same narrow-chested, toothless, pale, anaemic boys and girls in the beautiful country districts, where the cottages are all that is to be desired," she says, "as in the most crowded slums of London. So overcrowding cannot be the only source of mischief.

"The real cause of the deterioration of the population lies almost solely in the fact that our women know nothing about the duties which nature intended them to perform.

"There is but one way to improve the physique of [illegible] and that is to teach [illegible] the old [illegible] were the pride and joy of their grandmothers—to teach them to bake, to sew, to cook and above all, how to treat a baby.

"This could very easily be done if the well-to-do women were willing to teach them, but how many of the women of the middle and upper classes do know any of these things. And is it fair to expect the lower classes to be thrifty housewives and wise mothers when we, who are so much better educated, better nurtured and better housed, are so many of us such a dismal failure?

"English women," says Mrs. Jackson, "have just enough education to despise domestic work. The greater part of their food, as well as their clothes, is bought ready-made, and their one idea with regard to their children is to get them off their hands as soon as possible. The average English mother has absolutely no knowledge of discipline, and she cannot teach her children the simplest lessons of cleanliness and hygiene because she does not know them herself.

"The really good woman who attends philanthropic and political meetings, or frequents studios and concerts, when she ought to be minding her own domestic duties, is doing just as much mischief as the woman who plays bridge all the evening and half the afternoon.

"It is quite possible to be pretty and charming and well informed without in the least neglecting home duties. French women manage to combine the two roles; they are the most attractive women in the world, and they are excellent housekeepers. German women—though they sin against the artistic side of life—are extraordinarily well informed, and yet they, too, are good housekeepers."

THE TURN OF LIFE

A Time When Women are Susceptible to Many Dread Diseases—Intelligent Women Prepare for It. Two Relate Their Experience.

The "change of life" is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and the anxiety felt by women as it draws near is not without reason.

Every woman who neglects the care of her health at this time invites disease and pain.

When her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy, or congestion of any organ, the tendency is at this period likely to become active—and with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden. At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to form and begin their destructive work.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

These symptoms are all just so many calls from nature for help. The nerves are crying out for assistance and the cry should be heeded in time.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was prepared to meet the needs of woman's system at this trying period of her life. It invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried thousands of women safely through this crisis.

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and it will be furnished absolutely free of charge.

Read what Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound did for Mrs. Hyland and Mrs. Hinkle:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had been suffering with falling of the womb for years and was passing through the Change of Life. My womb was badly swollen, my stomach was sore, I had dizzy spells, sick headaches, and was very nervous.

"I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that all those distressing symptoms left me and I have passed safely through the Change of Life, a well woman. I am recommending your medicine to all my friends."—Mrs. Annie E. G. Hyland, Chestertown, Md.

Another Woman's Case.

"During change of life words cannot express what I suffered. My physician said I had a cancerous condition of the womb. One day I read some of the testimonials of women who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I decided to try it and to write you for advice. Your medicine made me a well woman, and all my bad symptoms soon disappeared.

"I advise every woman at this period of life to take your medicine and write you for advice."—Mrs. Lizzie Hinkle, Salem, Ind.

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Hyland and Mrs. Hinkle it will do for any woman at this time of life.

It has conquered pain, restored health, and prolonged life in cases that utterly baffled physicians.

Gilbert, "comedian at large," in songs and stories; Herbert Brooks, a sleight-of-hand manipulator with a gr[illegible] ... Alf Holt, mimic and whistler, and [illegible] were experts. A [illegible] in regard to [illegible] week of August [illegible] surveys the intelligence of [illegible] week of the Fadettes woman's orchestra. Their programme for the week will be made up of the most popular selections they have played this [illegible]

Tremont Theatre

Grand Opera House

[illegible] Opera House [illegible] is said to be a genuine thriller and [illegible] A great derrick swinging over the audience and a wireless telegraphy station in full operation, are among the other prominent features to be seen, while the lower part of New York will be depicted in a tenement house scene.

The story of the play is said to be one of intense interest, and while dealing with [illegible] plenty of comedy. Anne Blancke, one of the neatest women on the stage, will appear in a dual role, Larry, a saucy stable boy, and his sister Grace. Her lightning changes are said to be remarkable. A crowd of stable boys who can sing form a special feature. Matinees will be given as usual on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Empire Theatre

The production of [illegible] Howard's comedy drama "Saratoga" [illegible] In Saratoga Mr. Howard successfully pictured the types of character and life seen at the great watering place in the day of its [illegible] make the principal characters of the plot and the author was credited, when the play was first presented, with having caught the local atmosphere of Saratoga and given his scenes and incidents a most effective realism. The play was first presented at the old Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, and was also produced by the old Boston Museum Stock Company. It was [illegible]

Howard Theatre

[illegible] seen in a new sketch. Grace Howard, who is an eccentric American vocalist, will be seen and heard in dashing attire.

The D'Elmars in new comedy acrobatics and table jumping; Russell and [illegible], in an eccentric comedy dancing act; Nesson and Nesson, a team of novelty [illegible] roller skaters; [illegible] in a new Roman ring gymnastic entertainment; Rich and Harvey, a couple of song and dance blackface comedians; the Fel[illegible] in a soubrette feature turn; the Imperial Musical Duo, in an instrumental performance; Fred Bowman, banjoist and singing comedian; Billy Nichols, colored comedian-imitator and originator of [illegible] moving pictures will complete the bill, which will be continuous from 1 till 11.

Globe Theatre

The Globe Theatre will begin its regular season a week from Monday, August 28, presenting as the opening attraction "Hap" Ward and his big company of merrymakers in the new three-act musical farce, "The Grafter." It will be the first appearance of Mr. Ward as an individual star at the head of his own company. It was quite a [illegible] opens next Thursday morning for the advance sale for the first two weeks of the engagement, including the special holiday [illegible] seventy-five [illegible] reserved seats in the evening, with special twenty-five-cent matinees every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

Boston Theatre

The Boston Theatre will throw open its doors for the dramatic season of [illegible] on the evening of Saturday, September 2. It will be [illegible] management of Mr. Lawrence McCarty, who will [illegible] Paris and New York successes [illegible]

Park Theatre

[illegible] The scene of the play is laid in Boston and the plot is said to have to do with the legal side of forgery. [illegible] Margaret Pitt will play the title role in "Faith Mather." She is the daughter of Henry M. Pitt, for so long at the Boston Museum, and Fanny Addison Pitt, who succeeded Mrs. J. R. Vincent at that house.

Hollis Street Theatre

The Hollis Street Theatre will reopen for the season on Labor Day, September 2, with a special matinee. The attraction will be Paul Armstrong's "The Heir to the Hoorah," which from all accounts made one of the hits of last season in New York. [illegible] and the scene is laid in the West. The play is a straight comedy and introduces a lot of character bits. It will be presented by a strong and carefully selected company, and the staging is said to be handsome and complete.

Colonial Theatre

The Colonial Theatre will reopen for the regular season on Labor Day afternoon with William Faversham in his new production of "The Shepherd King" as the attraction for an engagement of one week only. His company, numbering upwards of 150 people, will be very much the same in personnel as last season, the only change of note being the retirement of May Buckley from the role of Michal. Miss Buckley is succeeded in the part by Helen Holmes, of last season's "Virginian" company. The [illegible]

Bowdoin Square Theatre

"Peck's Bad Boy," the famous farcical comedy, will be seen at the Bowdoin Square Theatre the coming week. All [illegible] heard of this [illegible] there are many who have never had the pleasure of seeing it. There are but few [illegible] for so many seasons successful attractions as has this [illegible] comedy [illegible] with new scenery and properties [illegible] up the cast. [illegible] will be Bad Boy, and [illegible] Marshall will be [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Major [illegible]

Lyceum Theatre

The Lyceum Theatre will reopen for the Fall and Winter season tomorrow afternoon, with the Trocadero Burlesquers as the attraction. [illegible] and is said to be even stronger than last year. Two new burlesques [illegible] "Keeping the Win[illegible]" and "A Saintly Sinner," and will be [illegible] presents a spectacular [illegible] projectiles from a cannon and a gun carriage with the ease with which [illegible] juggler handles [illegible] Among others in the olio are [illegible] comedians; the [illegible] singers of illustrated songs with moving pictures; Mae Taylor, vocalist; Al and Mabe Wilson, colored artists, and Mackie and Walker, character comedians.

Palace Theatre

This will be the last week of the stock company at the Palace Theatre, as the Summer season will close and the regular road attractions will begin their engagements. For the closing week there will be two new and laughable burlesques, entitled the "Bradley's Fourth of July" and [illegible] Both pieces will be full of good comedy and laughable situations [illegible] will be staged with [illegible] costumes will [illegible] The musical numbers [illegible] handsome girls in [illegible] and there will be several [illegible] The olio will [illegible] of excellent vaudeville acts.

The Columbia

Last evening the Columbia opened its doors for a short preliminary season. All Summer workmen have been engaged in thoroughly renovating this house. An electrically operated ice plant has been installed, and suction blowers in the dome carry off the hot air. This system is found to so thoroughly ventilate the auditorium that the smoking privilege, one of the most popular features of this house the past season, is rendered entirely inoffensive.

[illegible] the London Gaiety Girls Burlesquers are the attraction. Grace Leonard is the leading singer, and comedian Pat White is still with the company.

Austin & Stone's Museum

The Turner Southern Serenaders come to Austin & Stone's Museum the coming week fresh from the watermelon fields of Dixie land. There is an army of these dusky singers, dancers and comedians, and they are to give a realistic show of life in the South. They will show how they pick cotton, how they [illegible] river boats [illegible] ever seen at this resort. [illegible] The tenth edition of the Powell Minstrel Maids will introduce a number of surprises.

Paragon Park

To-day Speedy, the famous high diver, returns to Paragon Park for a week's engagement. Since Speedy made such a sensation here earlier in the season he has been at the Lewis and Clark Exposition in Oregon and comes direct from there to the Nantasket resort. His act may well be called the acme of sensationalism in the open air line. For the return engagement Speedy promises an added sensation. When he was last here he dived from the top of a ladder [illegible] high into a tank of water forty-five inches deep. Beginning to-day he promises to add fifty feet to the distance and to dive from the dizzy height of [illegible] feet into a tank of water [illegible] forty-six inches deep. Speedy's performance will be the big feature of the free open air [illegible]

The free [illegible] week there [illegible] horses, ponies and mules. This show will [illegible] the first given by [illegible] the funny educated mule, and the second part by a company of five pretty little ponies.

The Filipino Band has been added to the list of free attractions and is proving to be a great feature. The band is composed of eight native musicians who play upon native instruments and sing native songs.

Point of Pines

The Alabama Troubadours will play a return engagement in the rustic theatre at the Point of Pines beginning to-morrow. This is the original organization and is one of J. W. Gorman's most famous shows. The performers are all colored and they give a clean up-to-date performance. The first part represents a cotton field "way down South in Dixie," with all the colored boys and their dusky sweethearts making merry while the overseer's back is turned, and is full of catchy songs, nimble dances and darkey fun. After the first part comes the olio, which includes several comedians in monologues and a [illegible] a wire walker and a [illegible] The conclusion is a mixture in which pretty costumes and intricate march movements occupy prominent parts.

The usual nightly displays of fireworks will continue to be given, weather permitting, every night except Sundays and Mondays. This week's program will see many novelties. The free dance hall, the zoo, the electric illumination and the daily concerts by the Lynn Cadet Band are popular features.

To-day there will be the usual double concert by the Lynn Cadet and Milo Burke Bands.

Norumbega Park

The attraction in the covered open air theatre at Norumbega Park the coming week will be [illegible] entitled "The Golden Girl," presented by a company of well known players. The comedy is said to be clean, new, bright and extremely funny without resorting to horseplay, depending upon the witty dialogue and [illegible] to furnish the jollity [illegible] Phillips will have the principal [illegible]

[illegible] one of the many features [illegible] Norumbega Park [illegible] New England [illegible] groves [illegible]

Lexington Park

[illegible] one way [illegible] Revere [illegible] trolley trip [illegible] view of [illegible] revolutionary [illegible] from [illegible] down the toboggan slide, to ride on the merry-go-round, to tread the shady paths or to climb up the observation tower.

In the rustic theatre a novel entertainment will be offered the coming week in the comic opera, "Said Pasha," which will be presented by an excellent organization of comedians and a chorus of pretty girls.

Amusement Notes

The coming six days will see the last of the Fadettes woman's orchestra, who have been playing a wonderfully long and successful engagement at Keith's. Their program for the week will consist of request numbers sent in by patrons who have shown unusual interest in the rather unique contest.

George Marion came here to direct the final rehearsal of "The College Widow," and left for New York for the opening of Raymond Hitchcock's play.

A reproduction of Custer's famous "Last Stand" against the Indians on the Little Big Horn, is said to be a most realistic [illegible] in "Custer's Last Fight," which comes next week to the Grand Opera House.

The Summer season at the Empire Theatre will end next week with a revival of H. A. du Souchet's amusing farce comedy "The Man From Mexico," in which Mr. Walter Perkins will be seen again in his inimitable [illegible] of Benjamin Fitzhew.

THOMAS F. WALSH'S SON KILLED; MRS. J. L. KERNOCHAN AND EVELYN WALSH MAIMED BY AUTO'S PLUNGE AT NEWPORT

The Dead:

VINCENT WALSH, eighteen years old, son of Thomas F. Walsh, mining king and multimillionaire

The Injured:

MISS EVELYN WALSH, daughter of Thomas F. Walsh, leg broken and internal injuries

MRS. JAMES L. KERNOCHAN, suffering from bruises and internal injuries

HARRY OELRICHS, son of Charles M. Oelrichs, badly shaken up, otherwise uninjured.

HERBERT PELL, 2nd, son of Herbert Pell, badly shaken up and suffering from internal injuries

Newport, R. I., Aug. 19.—Speeding down the steep incline of Honeyman's Hill at a mile a minute pace, a heavy automobile, in which were five persons of national social fame, this afternoon at 4 o'clock crashed into a bridge, turned a somersault and fell, bottom side up, in the water of a small creek.

Sketch by Boston American Artist From Description of Accident.

As a result of the accident Vincent Walsh, son of Thomas F. Walsh, multi-millionaire mine owner of Newport, Washington and Denver, is dead; the beautiful Evelyn Walsh, a daughter of the mining king, is dangerously injured, a leg being broken and internal injuries inflicted; Mrs. James L. Kernochan of New York is internally injured, and Harry Oelrichs, Herbert Pell, 2d, and the chauffeur are badly shaken up. Miss Walsh's condition is critical.

Directly behind the automobile which was wrecked came another in which were Mrs. Charles Oelrichs and her daughter, Blanche, with a chauffeur. It was only by a seeming miracle that this second machine was prevented from piling on top of the Walsh machine, in which event those [illegible] would have been crushed to death.

DUE TO EXPLOSION OF TIRE.

The accident to the automobile which young Walsh was driving was due to the explosion of a tire, the consequent sliding of the rear wheels as it [illegible] turn from the hill to the bridge, and the inability of the young man—he was only eighteen years old—to stop the machine, a heavy Mercedes which had just arrived from Paris and cost $25,000.

When the tire on one of the rear wheels exploded, the front of the machine [illegible] and crashed at full speed against a post supporting a railing on the edge of the bridge. This post was [illegible] the way through the machine by the force of the crash, and the railing which it had supported being lifted, crashed against Walsh's skull, fracturing it. Then the machine tore a big gap in the railing by force of its own great weight and speed, and whirled over the edge into the two feet of water of the creek below. As it went it turned a complete somersault, throwing all the occupants, save Miss Walsh, free from the car into the water. Miss Walsh was caught by her legs beneath the edge of the car and one [illegible]

Miss [illegible] Mr. Oelrichs, young Mr. [illegible] Mr. Walsh and the chauffeur were thrown out into the water. Instantly Mr. Oelrichs, the chauffeur and Mr. Pell struggled to their feet and lifted Mrs. Kernochan, who was [illegible] to the edge. After a great effort Miss Walsh was freed of the weight which had broken her leg, and lifted out on solid ground. Frank Barry, [illegible] of Mrs. Oelrichs's car, [illegible] who had stopped the machine [illegible] work of rescue.

Miss Walsh [illegible] her from the Walsh [illegible] Waldorf Astor [illegible] [illegible] both has thus far been kept from her [illegible] present condition. Mrs. Walsh, the mother, is prostrated by the shock and the father, Thomas F. Walsh, nearly collapsed when the news was broken to him. His son and daughter were almost idolized.

ROSEN SEES ROOSEVELT; PEACE PROSPECT GAINS

President Has Plan Ready for Envoys if Conference at Portsmouth Fails.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Oyster Bay, Aug. 19.—When Baron Rosen, Russian ambassador and peace plenipotentiary, left Sagamore Hill after a conference of an hour and three-quarters with President Roosevelt to-night there were many in Oyster Bay who were convinced that the prospects of peace were brighter than they have been for many days. The President is said to have strongly urged an agreement on a peace basis.

Baron Rosen had responded blindly to the hasty midnight summons of the President, and when he landed from the Sylph he did not know the purpose of the call. The conference which was originally scheduled to last only half an hour, was extended to an hour and three-quarters, at the end of which time the ambassador and his secretary, Prince Koudacheff, left Oyster Bay, declaring themselves well pleased with the result.

Baron Rosen refused to talk of his meeting [illegible] further than to [illegible] peace negotiations [illegible] conversation. On [illegible] representation [illegible] Russia by the Czar, [illegible] he declared.

BARON ROSEN DISPATCHED.

The conversation lasted almost an hour, and during all this time, the corridor was thronged with excited correspondents striving to gain information on the turn that the situation had taken.

Peirce finished his task at the keyboard and hurried over to the annex in which the Russian suite is located. M. Witte had already retired, but Baron Rosen was [illegible] and the nature of the message from the President was communicated him. Peirce then left the hotel, saying to the correspondents that he would refuse to be quoted.

What had really occurred was this: The President had determined to make one more effort to bring the two nations together and he had commissioned Peirce to see M. Witte and request either the latter or Baron Rosen, or some other Russian in M. Witte's confidence, should visit him at Oyster Bay. Baron Rosen was dispatched.

As a result of the accident, the most [illegible] Newport [illegible] a great [illegible] society [illegible] of these [illegible] the victims [illegible] is shocked [illegible] grief [illegible] Walsh's, at [illegible] scores of curious [illegible] miles from the city.

HEARD A LOUD EXPLOSION.

[illegible] Walsh's body was removed from the hospital to his home to-night [illegible] [illegible] been an [illegible] fact that the accident came. The [illegible] swiftness, Frank Barry, chauffeur of [illegible] car, immediately [illegible] tells of an explosion of a tire.

[illegible] the accident is Easton's Beach [illegible] were in bathing [illegible] however, by a sudden rise. Therefore [illegible] were no witnesses to the accident [illegible] Mr. Oelrichs, the daughter and her chauffeur Frank Barry.

Thomas F. Walsh was at the Casino watching a tennis tournament when he [illegible] of the accident. He dashed to [illegible] and was driven [illegible] to the scene.

[illegible] found his daughter had been revived and was lying on the [illegible]. He started to take her in his arms [illegible] looked up and said:

FRANTIC WITH GRIEF.

"Never mind me, father. Please take [illegible] Vincent; he is badly hurt."

Mr. Walsh, who was frantic with grief, [illegible] boy's body into his carriage and drove to the Newport [illegible] death bed a few moments [illegible] Vincent [illegible]. When the ambulances arrived Miss Walsh and Mrs. Kernochan were taken to [illegible]. There Mrs. Walsh was apprised of the death of her son and her [illegible].

Mrs. James A. Stillman, Henry White [illegible] of the Walsh family were present [illegible] Miss Walsh and Mrs. Kernochan were brought to Beaulieu.

In [illegible] Walsh has a reputation [illegible] his automobiles this Summer. [illegible] week he was arrested in [illegible] Middletown and [illegible] for violating the speed laws. He was most popular [illegible] the younger set [illegible] Washington last Spring [illegible] Yale this Fall.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Walsh idolized their two children, and recently Mr. Walsh presented each of them with a forty horse-power Panhard. Vincent Walsh would have inherited a fortune of at least $10,000,000.

It was Harry Oelrichs's mother who was robbed of valuable jewels a month ago. His father is a prominent banker.

MR. OELRICHS'S STORY.

Mr. Oelrichs said to-night:

The accident was so sudden that I cannot say that I have any very distinct impression of it. Then, too, the shock of Mr. Walsh's death and the injuries to the others has quite unnerved me. I have only a vague impression of a loud noise, then of the car in which we were running turning a complete somersault. I don't know how [illegible] I found myself in the water and [illegible] tried to do every [illegible] others."

[illegible] chauffeur, who speaks very little English, said:

WHIRLING THROUGH THE AIR.

"Mr. Walsh said he would drive back [illegible] He handled the machine [illegible] it was on the steep grade of Honeyman's Hill that the accident happened. A tire burst, then the machine swung [illegible] and the first thing I knew we were whirling through the air. I helped [illegible] out of the water [illegible] nearly drowned [illegible] Walsh's [illegible] the accident.

Two Boston men, William Holt and [illegible] were early on the [illegible] Riley of Newport [illegible].

[illegible] said to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter:

"I was possibly fifty feet behind the Walsh auto [illegible] driving the car in which were Mrs. [illegible] her daughter. Just before [illegible] happened I heard a loud explosion from in front, and fearing accident of some kind immediately [illegible] the brakes [illegible].

[illegible] one of the tires of the [illegible] burst [illegible] saved [illegible] It was only by [illegible] that I prevented my [illegible] from doing [illegible] something.

Turned Completely Over.

"I brought it to a stop as soon as I could and then leapt out and ran back to the wreck. The car had turned completely [illegible] and lay upside down in the water. [illegible] occupants had all been thrown clear of it save Miss Walsh, whose legs had been caught beneath.

I assisted Mr. Oelrichs and young Mr. Pell [illegible] her out and we laid her and Mrs. Kernochan on the bank of the stream. After a while Mrs. Kernochan recovered somewhat and was able to sit up, but Miss Walsh was so injured she was unable to move. Mr. Walsh then seemed to be dying. He did die on the way to the Newport [illegible]."

J. L. KERNOCHAN A HATER OF AUTOS

Newport, Aug. 19.—Mrs. James L. Kernochan, who suffered severe injuries in the automobile accident here to-day, is the widow of James Lorillard Kernochan, [illegible] millionaire and society man, whose country home, "The Meadows," at Hempstead, L. I., is one of the show places near New York. She was Miss Eloise S[illegible] son, and is the daughter-in-law of Mrs. James P. Kernochan. She is a sister-in-law, too, of Mrs. Herbert Pell.

"The Meadows" was sold to Perry B[illegible] ment early this year. While Mrs. Kernochan was its mistress the present Duchess of Marlborough (Consuelo Vanderbilt) and the Duke of Marlborough were entertained there, as well as many others of the highest social importance. She had always been a woman foremost in society, but since the death of her husband, two years ago, has been living a somewhat retired life.

Strange enough, in view of the accident to-day from which Mrs. Kernochan only miraculously escaped death, is the fact that James L. Kernochan was a man who always despised automobiles, and who had an ever-present fear that an auto would ultimately bring disaster to his family.

In 1901 when "The Meadows" was the center of a Long Island colony of society folk Mr. Kernochan's antipathy to automobiles took a violent form and he barred them from his estate entirely. A large sign "Automobiles not admitted" stood at his gate for many months, before finally he was induced to look upon them more leniently.

This sign was the direct cause of a feud between the Kernochans, the Belmonts, the Mackays, the Keenes and the Vanderbilts. But it was a good natured feud. His aversion to the automobile was never fully explained, save perhaps by his ardent love for horses.

Mrs. Kernochan, too, has always been a noted horsewoman. With her husband she was a member of the Meadowbrook Hunt [illegible] of Long Island [illegible].

WALSH'S FATHER PARTNER OF A KING

Newport, R. I., Aug. 19.—Vincent Walsh, who was killed to-day near Easton's Beach in an automobile accident, and Evelyn Walsh, who is suffering from a broken leg [illegible] [illegible] Thomas F. Walsh [illegible] business partner of King Leopold [illegible].

The son, Vincent, whose body now lies in the palatial home of William Waldorf Astor [illegible] was only [illegible] years old. His beautiful sister, Evelyn, who recently was reported engaged to an Italian Prince, now lies there too, dangerously injured and delirious from her wounds. This is the mansion which Mr. Walsh, the father, leased at the beginning of the season here for $[illegible]. It was [illegible] occupied by the [illegible] Vanderbilts.

Well Known in Worcester.

Thomas F. Walsh has a history that reads like a romance. He was born in Tipperary county, Ireland, five miles from Clonmel, and two miles from Fethard. He went to school there as a boy and later learned the trade of a millwright.

He was well known in Worcester, Mass. He went there twenty-eight years ago and took up his residence with two aunts in Ash street, Mrs. M. Powers and Mrs. K. Powers. While there he worked as a carpenter [illegible].

On leaving Worcester about 1872 he went to Colorado and settled in Denver, working for a while at his trade. About this time mining [illegible] took his attention. With two partners, Bowers and Murphy, he took up a [illegible] claim at Denver. He remained there [illegible] years, sank a shaft and struck pay dirt and finally sold out to an eastern syndicate, and each of the three partners received $50,000.

Thomas Walsh then went to the Black Hills and settled in Leadville, where he ran a hotel called the Walsh house. After staying there awhile he sold out at an advance and returned to Denver, where he once more embarked in mining and has been interested in Denver mines ever since.

Coined Wealth in Hotel.

He was married in Leadville twenty-five years ago to Miss Carrie Reed of southern Wisconsin. His wife is like him in possessing a warm, cordial, open-hearted character, and has united with her husband in the kindnesses and innumerable [illegible].

On approaching [illegible] covered a shaft sunk for some feet on a ledge of rotten granite absolutely worthless [illegible].

[illegible] the roof of the shanty [illegible] found that the floor was [illegible] gold-bearing quartz [illegible].

Entertainments Marvels of Paris.

After he had accumulated his millions Mr. Walsh, with his beautiful wife and daughter and son, removed to Washington, where he purchased a magnificent house at No. 1420 New York avenue. Since that time he has maintained a residence there, another in New York, still another, a veritable palace, in Denver, and for several years was in Paris, where his entertainments were the marvel of Europe.

Mr. Walsh and his family removed to Paris at the time he was made a National Commissioner of the Paris Exposition in 1900. There he gave great fetes with [illegible] dinners and entertainments which startled the Continent by their magnificence. It was there, too, that his daughter and wife attracted universal attention by their striking beauty.

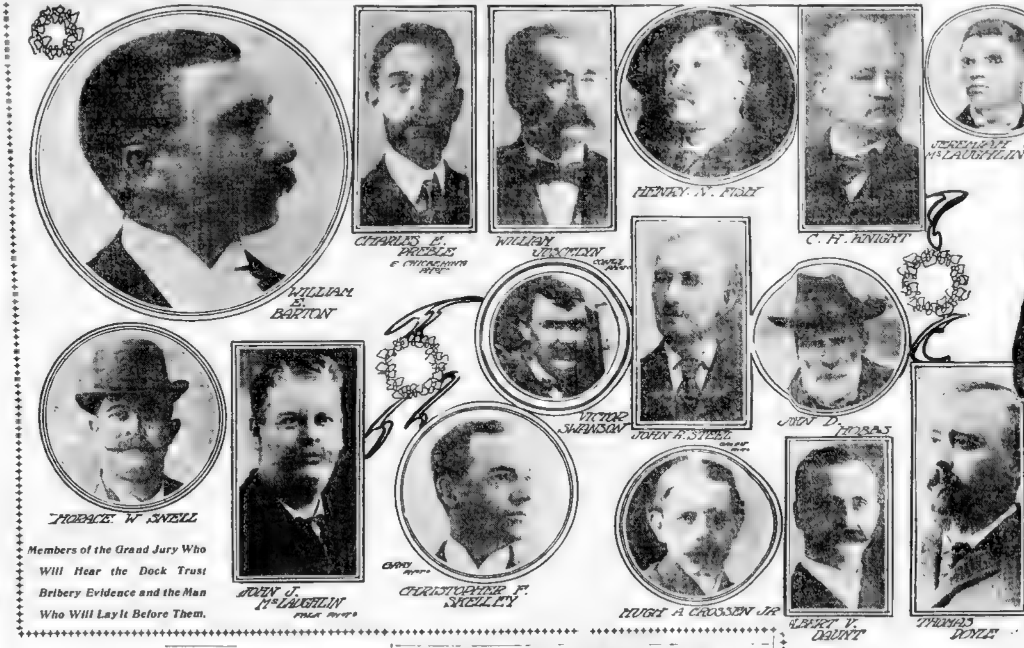
"I will make good," says Linehan, through his counsel. "I will give facts and names of bribery and bribe taking to the Grand Jury Monday."

POLICE PROBING BRIBE CHARGES, FIND CHECKS SIGNED BY DOCK TRUST MEN



Members of the Grand Jury Who Will Hear the Dock Trust Bribery Evidence and the Man Who Will Lay It Before Them.

DISTRICT-ATTORNEY SUGHRUE.

Councilman Newton of South Boston Summoned Among Witnesses Before Grand Jury—Linehan Will "Make Good," Says His Counsel. More Sensational Disclosures to Follow.

That it is the intention of District Attorney Sughrue and the police officials investigating the alleged bribery of ten members of the Board of Aldermen to probe to the very bottom and get all the facts is evidenced by the latest developments in the case.

Checks supposed to have an important bearing on the bribery charges have been discovered by Captain Dugan's inspectors, and the makers, indorsers and all who have handled the checks have been summoned to appear before the Grand Jury and tell what they know about them.

POLICE PROBE THROUGH.

The fact that the checks have been brought into the case shows that the police have made a thorough inspection of the books of the Dock Trust.

Another sensational feature is the statement of Edward P. Barry, of counsel for Alderman Linehan, that the alderman will tell all he knows about bribery and attempted bribery, holding nothing back and shielding no one that to his knowledge is guilty of wrongdoing in connection with the passage of the Dock Trust grab by the aldermen.

Another significant feature of the case is the serving of a summons on ex-Councilman William S. Newton, who is said to have been very friendly personally with Alderman Linehan. Mr. Newton had intended to go away for a vacation, but he will have to defer that plan on account of the summons to appear and tell the Grand Jury what he knows, if anything, about the alleged attempted bribery.

CHECK AROUSED SUSPICION.

The check that has excited the suspicion of Captain Dugan was made out by Burroughs & De Blois, of the National Dock Trust to the Political Publishing Company, William A. Pierce, treasurer. The company publishes The Politician, a weekly paper devoted to gossip of a political nature. The check was for $50 and was cashed by John Keenan, the well known sporting man and saloon keeper of Howard street. The check was given to Edward Keevin, who is interested in the Politician, and by him turned over to Mr. Pierce.

Pierce and Keevin have received summonses to appear before the grand jury and tell what the check was for. Up to a late hour last night Keenan had not received a summons, but Captain Dugan said early in the evening that Keenan would be summoned to tell the Grand Jury what he knows.

Pierce was at one time interested in the Police News, and Keevin has been the backer of several boxers. Pierce went to Exeter, N. H., yesterday, but has promised to be on hand Monday. Keevin says the payment of the check was an entirely proper matter. He says:

"For Printing List of Names."

"In the issue of our paper of August 12 we printed a list of the men and firms of consequence in East Boston who were in favor of the Dock Trust and their petition before the Board of Aldermen.

"The list was sent to our office by Messrs. Burroughs and De Blois. We looked it over and charged $50 for printing it. The check was paid to us in advance as is the usual custom with our office, and Mr. Keenan cashed it for Mr. Pierce. That is all there is to it.

"The $50 was not for the purpose of attempting to influence the Board of Aldermen. It was for advertising. Mr. Pierce and myself will have no hesitation in telling the Grand Jury all we know about the check. I have explained the matter to Inspector Armstrong."

When Keenan was asked about his connection with the check and told that the police seemed to think it had important bearing on the Dock Trust scandal he exclaimed:

"Well, that's a hot one. That's off the hat. So I am to be summoned to tell the Grand Jury what I know about? Well, I have not received the summons yet, but I hope they do summon me. I can easily tell all I know about it. I cashed a check a short time ago for Billy Pierce or Eddie Keevin, which one I don't just remember for $50. I do not know who the maker of the check was. Why, I have cashed checks for them for years."

Has Often Cashed Checks.

Referring to his books Mr. Keenan found that the check was cashed by him on July 17 and banked two days later. Other entries in the books showed that he has cashed checks at various times for Pierce since 1898.

Continuing, Keevin said: "Fifty dollars is a pretty small matter to arouse the suspicions of the police against the Board of Aldermen. But perhaps the police think it is big money for the board. I do. I wouldn't give thirty cents for the whole lot of them. I know nothing about bribing the Aldermen, and will gladly give the Grand Jury the benefit of all the information I have about all checks I have cashed. I do believe, however, that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, and I have told some of the ham politicians that in my opinion this investigation might hurt somebody."

Captain Dugan said last evening that his inspectors have been [illegible] investigating and will have considerable [illegible] through witnesses to the grand jury. He admitted that the check cashed by Keenan was supposed to have a [illegible] bearing on the case, and said [illegible] Keenan would [illegible].

"I cannot tell you how we heard about the check," said Captain Dugan, "but we think it is important in this case and it must be explained."

Probe to Be Thorough.

"I should judge from this development that you were making a very thorough investigation, Captain Dugan?" was suggested.

"Well, while I cannot, of course, tell you just what we are doing, I can say that the investigation is to be as thorough as we can make it."

Mr. Burroughs, of Burroughs & DeBlois, is the man who has admitted that he gave money to Martin Ryan, the labor leader and Republican politician, who was accused by President Peter Collins of the Boston Central Labor Union with having offered to pay him for his influence with the members of the Board of Aldermen in favor of the Dock Trust grant.

Alderman Linehan, who has been out of the city since Thursday on the advice of his counsel, returns to-day and will have a conference with Lawyer Edward P. Barry. They will go over the evidence that is in the possession of the Alderman, and he will be told just what his rights are.

Alderman Linehan will go before the grand jury Monday with [illegible] says Lawyer [illegible]. He will tell all he knows about this affair, and, take my word for it, the result is going to be something more than a flurry. He will tell all he knows and will not attempt to keep anything back. On my advice he has gone away from interviews. I cannot tell you just where he is at the present time. I have had word from him that he will be at my office Sunday. He will be here all right for the grand jury."

"Then he will tell the names of the men who approached him with offers of money?"

"I will say that he will make good all he said about this case. He will tell the names if he is asked to. I have told him that he will be obliged to do that."

He has said that he would not divulge the name of the man who sought his influence improperly because he was on his honor not to do that. What will he do about that man when he is before the grand jury, Mr. Barry was asked.

"He will have to tell the names of all parties who had anything to do with the case. He would not tell this man's name under ordinary circumstances, but before the grand jury it is a different matter."

Must Tell All He Knows.

"He must tell all he knows or take the consequences. He will tell all and, as a result, there will probably be witnesses summoned by the District Attorney who have not been as yet connected with the case publicly."

"What do you think will be the result of Alderman Linehan's testimony before the Grand Jury?"

"I think the result will be serious for some people. Mr. Linehan is going to have to [illegible] for all the charges he has made, I think," said Lawyer Barry.

Mr. Linehan will probably be the first witness called by the Grand Jury, which will meet at 9:30 o'clock. He may be followed immediately by George Burroughs, treasurer of the National Dock Trust, who asked the track permits the passage of which over Mayor Collins's veto precipitated the charges of bribery.

Captain Dugan has now all the evidence to be secured at this time in the presentation to the Grand Jury of the bribery charges. Later this work may go further.

Jury Meets To-morrow.

The grand jury will convene to-morrow morning at 9:30 o'clock to begin the probing. It will be an extraordinary session for an extraordinary purpose. Evidently this is a most unusual condition of affairs demanding the attention of the grand jury, especially as [illegible] Justice Aiken granted the request of District Attorney Sughrue for the special session immediately it had been made. Under the request from the Board of Aldermen to the District Attorney he is asked to make an immediate investigation of all the facts relating to the charges of bribing Aldermen.

District Attorney Sughrue took the Aldermen at their word and did not waste a moment after receiving it. Captain Joseph Dugan of the bureau of criminal investigation, who had been [illegible] by Chairman [illegible] of the police commission to hold himself in readiness to act in the case, was requested by the District Attorney to get the evidence that should be submitted to the Grand Jury. Captain Dugan says he will get all the facts that can be gathered by himself and Inspectors McGarr, Armstrong and Norton.

"It makes no difference to me who is hit," Captain Dugan says. "I shall make the inquiry as efficient and thorough as it is possible for me to do."

While District Attorney Sughrue will not [illegible] the steps he has taken and is [illegible] discussing the case, he has [illegible] the very moment that he received the request of the Aldermen for an investigation.

Probe to Be Thorough.

"I will make the investigation as thorough as possible. More than that I cannot say." It is known that summonses have been served on all the members of the Board of Aldermen, all the officials of the National Dock Trust and the National Dock and Warehouse Company, a number of prominent [illegible] leaders, Messrs. Pierce, Keevin, [illegible] and ex-Councilman Newton. It is said that nearly fifty persons have been summoned.

After the evidence of Alderman Linehan has been heard it is likely that extra summonses will be issued. In anticipation of a large and excited crowd at the meeting of the Grand Jury to-morrow Sheriff Seavey has asked for a large detail of police to keep the corridors of the court house clear and to prevent trouble.

Public interest has been wrought up to a great pitch by the disclosures and hints of disclosures that have been made since the action of the District Attorney was invoked. It is being realized that the bribery charging and the Dock Trust grab are destined to be famous cases in the political history of Boston. When the petition of the Trust was first presented to the Board there was not much interest in it. It was not until the newspapers began to show up the extraordinary character of the privileges asked that the real nature of the proposition was understood.

The Trust asked for the right to lay tracks and operate a steam railway in the streets of East Boston, crossing Marginal street, [illegible] Webster street and across Lewis street, across Sumner and then across Webster street, using the public streets for a distance of 220 feet. The grant was to be given for an indefinite time.

Mayor Objects to Grant.

In his veto Mayor Collins said the grant was objectionable from the standpoint of public convenience and safety and that there was no public necessity that called for the giving up of public streets to a private corporation. The orders for the grants, he said, had public inconvenience and injury written in every line of them.

In the face of the veto of Mayor Collins the aldermen proceeded to pass the grant, Alderman James Curley moving that the orders be granted notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor. On the first vote the Mayor was sustained, but the friends of the Dock Trust were not satisfied and had another vote on the motion when the necessary votes for the passage of the orders over the veto were gathered in.

It was at that crisis that Alderman Frank J. Linehan arose and made the declaration which has made him famous, to the effect that the ten aldermen who voted against the veto had been "bought and bought cheap," a statement which he followed up by declaring that bribery and corruption had worked the victory for the trust against the objections of the mayor.

HENRY SIEGEL FIRE BRIGADE SHOWS FAST WORK.

Trained Men Turn Out Just to Demonstrate Its Ability, Only Small Blaze Nearby, but All Hands Are Ready

During a fire in Wirth's restaurant on Essex street yesterday afternoon the fire brigade of the Henry Siegel Company's building was called into action for the first time.

Although there seemed to be hardly any chance that the fire would get beyond the building where it started, the Siegel brigade, which has been in training ever since the store was completed, made every preparation to fight any sort of a fire that could occur.

Men on the several floors were at their posts with the big pipes. Others found their stations on the roof and at a signal would have been ready to turn on the sprinkler system by which the side of the Siegel building nearest the fire would have been deluged with a solid sheet of water, making it impossible for the flames to obtain any foothold whatever.

In addition to being fireproof the Siegel building is equipped from basement to roof with every modern device known to the science of fire fighting, making it amply protected both from without and within.

DOGS SAVE FAMILY CAT NEARLY DOOMS

Garrettford, Pa., Aug. 19.—The family of John Evans of this place narrowly escaped death by asphyxiation and was saved only by the barking of dogs. The dogs awakened Mr. Evans, and on sitting up in bed he felt a peculiar dizziness and a feeling of nausea. He managed to raise the window, and then aroused the rest of the family.

Down stairs he found the house cat lying dead on the floor beside the gas range. An investigation showed that the cat had struck the gas lever with its paw, allowing the gas to escape.

DR. SHOOP

MRS MALMYRA M. ALDEN.

First picture ever published of wife of Brockton special policeman, whose charges have involved the police department in scandal.

Mrs. Malmyra Alden of Brockton, Handsome, Magnetic and Philanthropic, Retaliates Injury to Her Husband and Demands Vindication of Her Own Good Name.

By Eleanor Ames.

Brockton, Aug. 19.—A [illegible] repulsing [illegible] a woman's [illegible] of causes [illegible] to the present sensational state of affairs in Brockton where the police system is being shaken from top [illegible] with [illegible] racking [illegible] has set [illegible] years [illegible] among [illegible] women of the town.

According to Mrs. Alden [illegible] she [illegible] her husband for [illegible] years a [illegible] officer and a [illegible] positions [illegible] of all authority and [illegible] possible way.

Discharged After Threat.

She declares that the act followed a threat made because of her line of conduct, and she determines that the investigation shall reinstate her husband, or at least make clear and valid the reasons for his discharge, and in addition set her right in the eyes of the entire world.

For several [illegible] Mrs. Alden [illegible] and [illegible]

Every [illegible] from the [illegible] longed [illegible] and [illegible]

About four [illegible] forts toward [illegible] in the last [illegible] girls who [illegible] despair [illegible] and brought [illegible] She has placed twenty [illegible] in good homes.

Besides this work she has accomplished great good [illegible] people. In [illegible] or less in contact with the various [illegible] ficials.

Mrs. Alden is an energetic and forceful woman. She is [illegible] Her life has been [illegible] and [illegible] been always a business [illegible] is not the slightest [illegible] about her and [illegible] man who would [illegible] She is tall, probably five feet [illegible] weighs close to 200 pounds. However she is so well proportioned that [illegible] think of her weight. [illegible] be called "a fine large woman of [illegible] bearing." Her face is frank [illegible] pleasant, smiling, yet firm and determined.

Her dark gray eyes, full of expression, fringed with black lashes, grow tender with emotion as she talks of the girls she has helped, and the temptations which lie in the path of the homeless working girl, or flash with indignation as she talks of the reason for having been obliged to bring her troubles into notice.

Mrs. Alden is a woman of much vitality and magnetism. She is the picture of health. Her looks glow with [illegible] eyes are [illegible] [illegible] where the [illegible]

"Thank Heaven [illegible] I can go to work at my profession of nursing and make a good living."

Mrs. Alden sat silent for a moment as though thinking over all the trials in her [illegible]

"It seems to be a case of a wheel within wheels as far as local politics are concerned. [illegible] around his finger.

"At any rate I know that my husband has been dropped as a special officer without [illegible] a fair trial, and that an effort has been made to oust him from several [illegible] he holds, including that as [illegible] for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

"It is time that a thorough and far reaching investigation was made.

"There may be more sensations unearthed than have already been brought to light. I believe when Stella Elliott told her story that she told the truth."

Mrs. Alden's husband, Arthur P. Alden, has been a special officer for twenty years. Both he and Mrs. Alden are widely and favorably known. Mr. Alden had been [illegible] child [illegible]

A Nurse Before Marriage.

Mrs. Alden, who is considerably his junior, being about the age of his elder daughter, was a nurse [illegible] to her [illegible] and afterward resigned her profession [illegible]

[illegible] interest in unfortunate girls dates back to the time [illegible] six years [illegible] Alden [illegible] was in the [illegible] of a large [illegible] goods [illegible]

Going home from work [illegible] she met a girl about her own age who was crying bitterly. Mrs. Alden stopped and spoke to her, and the child told her story. She had no mother and no home and was about to become a mother.

Mrs. Alden knew what a life without a mother's care meant. She was four years old when her mother died, and only eleven when she went out in the world to make her own way.

"I could not endure to see a child without a home," declares Mrs. Alden, "or to see a girl who has [illegible] bear the snubs [illegible]

"So I took the child home with me, and another girl and I took care of her and supported her until we could get her in [illegible] After the child was born I got [illegible] afterward adopted. [illegible] I found a place for the girl to work and today she is happily married and living a [illegible] good life. No girl goes wrong because she wants to.

"She is either led astray by a stranger [illegible] alone and homeless and poverty stricken.

"Three-fourths of the girls whom I meet are [illegible] better lives. The other fourth are too far gone to go much in the way of reform.

"Much Sin In Brockton."

"Brockton is not a large city, but no one knows how much sin there is in it.

"People have dreaded the publicity into which this case will bring me," declares Mrs. Alden, "but I can bear it. I have done nothing wrong. No man can insult a woman and then hope to be saved from exposure through her fear of publicity.

"I was told that I would be too proud spirited to do this. How did the person know me? I have done no wrong and have nothing to fear.

"I am a Christian woman and the other people involved in this case have always professed to be Christians. The [illegible] will determine the truth of their claims."

Mrs. Alden's eyes flashed and her full red lips straightened and grew earnest. She is a handsome woman and clever.

ASKS WARRANT FOR BOYDEN ON PERJURY CHARGE

Brockton, Aug. 19.—Direct and specific charges of perjury preferred against City Marshal William A. Boyden in Brockton Police Court today by Attorney John B. Moran of Boston, together with a request made by the attorney for Boyden's arrest on these charges, were taken under advisement by Judge Reed. He will go over the evidence submitted by Attorney Moran and will inform him during the coming week if a warrant shall issue.

Attorney Moran, who is counsel for Editor Dwyer of the Brockton "Searchlight," complains that Boyden perjured himself in testifying at the recent hearings on the charges of criminal libel which Boyden had previously lodged against Dwyer as editor of the "Searchlight." The criminal libel hearing was before Judge Bixby, who is Associate Justice of the same court of which Judge Reed is the senior Justice. Judge Bixby has the criminal libel charges also under consideration. This makes the charge of perjury sought by Dwyer's counsel against Boyden, the original complainant, of added interest at this time.

Submits Charges.

Attorney Moran submitted to Judge Reed specific instances of alleged perjury on Boyden's part. Boyden, on the other hand, says he has not been guilty of perjury, that politics is at the bottom of it and that it is an attempt to "throw mud" on his administration of the police department.

Boyden's original complaint of criminal libel against Editor Dwyer was based on an article in the "Searchlight" dealing with the arrest of Stella Elliot and with the accusations made against Boyden by Mrs. Malmyra Alden, wife of a former policeman. Since then Mayor Keith has exonerated Boyden from charges made by Mrs. Alden. Mrs. Alden, however, replied with a scathing denunciation of the Mayor's exoneration of Boyden.

Meanwhile Boyden lodged his charge of criminal libel against Editor Dwyer and hearings on this were held July 26, 27 and 28. It is on alleged contradictions in Boyden's testimony at these hearings that Attorney Moran, as counsel for Dwyer, bases his present perjury charges.

Says Stories Conflict.

Attorney Moran to-day pointed out that in his testimony on July 27 Marshal Boyden had acknowledged having been in the office of Lawyer Chamberlain, counsel for Harris, on July 17, but denied having ever met Harris there or having returned. In the testimony of July 28 Moran claimed Marshal Boyden contradicted these statements when he acknowledged that he had met Harris in Chamberlain's office on July 18.

Lawyer Moran submitted the testimony of Boyden, showing where he stated that Harris had reported Stella Elliot to him for night walking ten or fifteen times within the three months before her arrest.

The testimony of Harris, according to the notes, was that he had not reported Stella Elliot for street walking at any time within the six months previous to her arrest.

Mr. Moran stated that the stenographic report showed that Boyden had testified that certain notes introduced as evidence at the Dwyer hearing were taken by Deputy Marshal L. B. Allen during an interview between the marshal and Dwyer, while Allen testified that the notes were not written by him until several minutes after the interview was over, and were then dictated by Boyden.

OLD LOVE CHILLED PRETTY WIDOW AT ALTAR AGAIN.

Once Sued for Divorce and $100,000 for Alienation of Affections by Husband's Rich Rhode Island Family

Providence, Aug. 19.—A quiet wedding here last Thursday recalled two of the most sensational divorce and alienation of affections suits ever entered in a Rhode Island court.

Mrs. Agnes Estelle Mann, one of the most beautiful young widows in Rhode Island, was the bride and the groom was Frank Ray Wallace, aged twenty-six, undertaker. Mrs. Mann was given away by C. C. Simmons. Mrs. Ella Simmons acting as matron of honor, and little Kenneth F. Mann, son of Mrs. Mann's [illegible] and serving as ring boy. The couple left for a honeymoon among the Thousand Islands.

Mrs. Agnes Estelle Mann was Miss Buck, the daughter of a mason. Her twenty-ninth birthday came today. When twenty years old Miss Buck [illegible] a romantic attachment [illegible] Caleb S. Mann, son of Mrs. Huldah Mann, one of the wealthiest widows in Rhode Island. One child was born and [illegible] until 1898 [illegible] Mrs. Mann went to her mother and [illegible] for $100,000 [illegible] against Mrs. Huldah Mann, Edward [illegible] her son, and Mrs. [illegible] for [illegible] that these [illegible] her husband and treated her [illegible] and had alienated the affections of her husband. She also brought suit for divorce on the grounds of non-support, desertion, drunkenness and extreme cruelty, and in a part of her bill declared that [illegible] and showed signs of mental trouble and [illegible]

Eminent counsel were engaged on both sides, Barney & Lee representing Mrs. Mann and General Charles [illegible] United States District Attorney [illegible] Cowell and S. A. [illegible] Jr. appearing for the Manns.

The case was passed at the November term of the Supreme Court pending the most strenuous efforts to effect a satisfactory adjustment. During [illegible] the husband died.

Despite her plea of [illegible] Mrs. Mann admitted in court that she owned a house worth $5,000, but asserted that her relatives had taken [illegible] doing what her husband should [illegible]

The Manns have real estate [illegible] and in Cranston and Warwick. When Caleb S. Mann died his property was inventoried at nearly $200,000.

SHARPENING SICKLE WHEN IT KILLS HIM

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 19.—John Shirley, aged twenty-three years, met death in a singular manner at the plant of the Crawford Automobile Company. His throat was cut and the jugular vein severed by a sickle, and he died before medical aid could reach him.

Shirley was engaged in sharpening a sickle on an emery wheel when the accident occurred. In some unaccountable way the handle of the sickle came off and the sharp blade flew up and struck him across the neck. The jugular vein was completely severed and the young man fell with the life blood gushing into his throat.

KIDNAPPED HINDU PRINCESS AND HER MISSIONARY FRIEND

HINDU PRINCESS STOLEN FROM FRIENDS.

Former Resident of Boston Kidnapped by Natives in Far East Because She Was Converted to Christianity

$100,000 OFFERED TO GET HER BACK

Sooboonagam Ammal, [illegible] Hindu princess, convert to Christianity and missionary, has been kidnapped by her own people and is now held a prisoner somewhere within the seclusion of the [illegible] about Madras, India. [illegible] prison is defended by hundreds of [illegible] Brahmins, devoted followers of the princess' mother, who has never relinquished her efforts to have the young convert restored to the gods of her fathers.

Appeals for aid [illegible] have been made to Washington and the government of India. Missionaries are on their way to help [illegible] wife of the [illegible] with [illegible] story of Sooboonagam [illegible] have [illegible] to trace her abductors and have failed.

So far as [illegible] friends are concerned, Sooboonagam is [illegible] They fear that she will be subjected to unimagined tortures beyond description, that perhaps her body may be offered up as a sacrifice to the gods she deserted when she [illegible] Christianity.

Constant Fear of Capture.

Before the young Hindu will be given up by the missionaries and permitted to return to the religion which she abandoned of her free will, there will be presented for her release as vigorous a campaign as was made for Miss Ellen Stone, who was [illegible]

It is known that Sooboonagam cannot be held for ransom. Her [illegible] friends are [illegible] and that they will go to any extreme before they will permit her to return [illegible]

It was [illegible] that Sooboonagam [illegible] Miss Grace Stephens [illegible] young Hindu [illegible] missionary and worked among [illegible]

All of this she would fear that she would be taken back by her family. So great did this terror become that she was brought to Boston by Miss Stephens. [illegible] Sooboonagam went with her.

Captured by Natives.

Their fears were not allayed by what they heard when they were again in Madras. Sooboonagam's family were as desirous as ever of getting back the girl [illegible] preferred [illegible] with her work [illegible]

Miss Stephens found traces of [illegible] poison [illegible]

It was on July 18 that she was abducted [illegible] was on her way to Miss Stephens [illegible] natives [illegible] She was dragged [illegible]

FEAR BRITISH SHIP HAS FALLEN PREY TO OCEAN STORM.

Vessel Sent Out from Newport News in Search of Craft 9 Days Overdue—Two Boys Besides Crew of 27 Aboard

New York, Aug. 19.—As no tidings have yet been received of the British steamer Athos, now nine days overdue from [illegible] Antonio, Jamaica, the alarm for the safety of the vessel and those aboard her is growing. The government has sent out a vessel from Newport News to search for the Athos.

The ship was last heard from on August 8. She was then drifting, with crippled engines, about 150 miles to the eastward of Jacksonville, Fla. Captain Dobson on [illegible] Robert [illegible]

Besides Captain Dobson and his crew of twenty-seven men there were two boys aboard, James A. McDonald, Jr., fourteen-year-old son of the owner of the vessel, and one of [illegible] a son of H. S. Saunders of Brooklyn.

Because of the many severe storms recently, which might find a vessel [illegible] easy prey, the greatest anxiety is felt. A number of Brooklyn men are in the Athos crew.

TWIN GIRLS ALWAYS HAVE SAME ILLNESS

Dayton, O., Aug. 19.—One of the most remarkable cases of mental derangement in the history of the Dayton State Hospital is that of Grace and Ada Gamps, twin sisters, twenty years of age, brought here from Georgetown, Brown County, for treatment.

Their affliction is what is known as sympathetic insanity, and develops itself only when great affection exists between the parties so affected. It is said the sisters have been similarly afflicted by disease. Whenever [illegible] affecting one affects the other in a similar manner.

COINCIDENCES IN DEATHS.

Paris, Ky., Aug. 19.—A remarkable coincidence in the death of the venerable John D. Hearne, president of the [illegible] National Bank [illegible] was that he was smitten with the same disease [illegible] the same length of time, died [illegible] and was buried on the same day of the month as his old friend Dr. Wash Fithian, just one year to the day and hour.

HOT TRYING TO GET DIVORCE EVIDENCE.

arber Admits That Private Detectives Were Seeking Proof Against Wife When Fraser Met Sudden Death

..TAL FIGHT CAME AT FORCED ENTRANCE

nted to Surprise Wife in fort to Procure Separation, but Says He Did Not re to Go to House Alone

In the trial of Joseph Evans on e charge of having murdered eorge L. Fraser, a private detecve, which has been in progress a week in the Somerville Police rt, Allen J. Barber, the husband ertrude C. Barber, who was ing as the housekeeper of Evans, on cross-examination yesterday, mitted that he and the detectives d gone to the Evans house on the ght of the tragedy to surprise his wife and get evidence if possible for a divorce.

Further [illegible] Barber was forced to admit that neither he nor any of the private detectives nor police officers who accompanied him had any right to enter house unless they were invited and none of them was invited. He said he would not have entered the house s some of the others had led the because he was afraid of a threat Evans had made to kick him down s if he ever caught him in his house n

The [illegible] of the case will be resumed Monday when Policeman Frank Hopkins [illegible] the party to the [illegible] stand. [illegible] Mrs. Gertrude Barber [illegible] the killing revolves, [illegible] as a witness by the [illegible] may be put on by the defence.

Physicians Will Testify.

We have proven that Evans shot the [illegible] Police Superintendent Park [illegible]

"Would Be Friend to Both."

Mr. [illegible] read the letter [illegible] Evans [illegible] which the latter [illegible] Barber down stairs [illegible] in his house again. The letter also said—and Mr. Witte had Barber [illegible] that if Barber wanted his wife he could [illegible] he [illegible] and he (Evans) would [illegible] to [illegible] of them

"Don't you think," asked Lawyer Witte, "that this showed that Evans was trying to do the fair thing with you?"

"I did not take it that way," said Barber.

Q.—Did you [illegible] there would be no trouble if you kept away. A.—Yes.

Q.—But you took chances? A.—Yes.

Q.—You expected trouble before you went. A.—Yes.

Was Expecting Trouble.

Q.—When did you expect the trouble to begin? A.—At any time.

Q.—Did you expect to go in until some one led the way? A.—No.

Q.—Why did you intend to wait? A.—I had no business to go in unless as invited.

Q.—Did anyone have a right to go unless invited? A.—No, not unless he was invited.

Q.—Did anybody invite you in? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did anybody invite anybody? A.—No, sir.

Q.—If Fraser hadn't gone in would you have gone in that night? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did it make any difference to you how Fraser got in? A.—No.

No Attemtp to Stop Struggle.

Q.—Why did Fraser go first? A.—I don't know.

Q.—You say there was a struggle at the door? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you say anything to stop it? A.—No.

Q.—Did you do anything? A.—No.

Lawyer Witte read a letter from Barber to his wife in which he said he had got all the necessary evidence to connect her with [illegible] He advised her to leave Evans's house.

"Who is the man mentioned in the letter?" asked Mr. Witte.

"A young man with whom I had trouble about my wife."

Q.—You had not been pleased with your wife for several years? A.—No.

Says Evans Had a Gun.

Q.—You were thinking of getting a divorce? A.—Yes, if there was no other way out of it.

Policeman Frank C. Hopkins, who accompanied Fraser and the detectives to Evans's house, was the next witness. [illegible] did not enter the house until after [illegible] In response to questions by Captain Perry, Hopkins said: [illegible] in the kitchen. He [illegible] It was pointed toward me [illegible] gun. He said: I [illegible] to an officer. I took the gun from Evans and took it to the door. [illegible] to Lieutenant Carter [illegible] I took Evans back to the kitchen. [illegible] by somebody Evans [illegible]

"I didn't know who it was—they may have been going to rob me.' Evans said: 'I might not have shot him—I don't know that I shot him.'"

Captain Perry produced the revolver that was taken from Evans. It was still [illegible] but the chamber was not in place. Captain, Hopkins, Witte and O'Neil handled the weapon, flourishing it about. [illegible] in the court room craned their necks forward.

'SATISFIED WITH MY DAUGHTER'S CHOICE? SURELY,' SAYS CROKER

Latest photograph of the daughter of former Tammany chieftain whose marriage to an Italian count meets with the cordial approval of her father.

Former Tammany Chieftain Declares That His Daughter is Happily Wedded to Count Louis San Marino and That He Is Satisfied.

London, Aug. 19.—"I am much pleased and my daughter is happy," said Richard Croker today in discussing his daughter's reported marriage to Count Louis San Marino.

"There is nothing in the elopement story, so far as I know," he added. "My daughter is at home, having come from the Continent to visit me, not knowing I was in London."

On arriving at Queenstown and not finding her father, she telegraphed to him. In answer Mr. Croker cut short his London visit and left Andrew Freedman to entertain himself at the Carlton, he himself [illegible] arriving at [illegible]

Mr. Croker [illegible] a moment standing by the [illegible] of his [illegible] then he said:

"No; you had better not do that, because I won't know the facts until I see my daughter."

"Oh!" came from the lips of several women. There was a rustle of excitement. It did not cease until the judge took the weapon and laid it on the bench.

Barber Entered House.

Father [illegible] Barber said he entered the Evans house after the shot was fired.

"Where was Evans when you went in?" asked Witte.

"In a chair in the kitchen," said Barber.

Q.—Was he handcuffed? A.—There were officers with him. I couldn't see.

Q.—What was your object in going directly through the kitchen? A.—I wanted to get to my wife's room.

Q.—Did you know where your wife's room was? A.—I don't know as I did.

Q.—How did you come to go directly to that room? A.—It was the only room from which a light came.

Q.—Did you see your wife before you reached her bedroom? A.—No.

Q.—Where did you find her? A.—In bed. I think she was sitting partly on the side of the bed.

Q.—Did you ask where her room was? A.—No.

Q.—Did you see a couch in the dining room? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was there any pillow on it? A.—I didn't see any.

This is the couch upon which Evans was supposed to have slept. The evidence of Detective White and Mrs. Barber was to the effect that the couch didn't look as if it had been slept on.

Mr. Barber said that after he went into the bedroom where his wife was Lieutenant Carter and Detective White came in.

Spoke to His Wife.

Q.—Did Carter say anything to your wife? A.—Yes. He asked her why she [illegible] of me.

Q.—Did he ask her anything else? A.—There was something said but I can't remember what it was.

Q.—Did White say anything to your wife? A.—I don't think so.

Q.—When you passed through to your wife's room did you step over the dead body? A.—Yes, I did.

Q.—You didn't know whose it was? A.—No.

Q.—How long did you stay in your wife's room? A.—Several minutes.

Q.—And then what did you do? A.—I went through the dining room and passed through the hallway.

Q.—And did you look at the body? A.—Just glanced at it.

Q.—Did you ask whose body it was? A.—I did not.

Q.—And you stepped over it twice? A.—Yes.

Anxious to Get In.

The object of these facts brought out by Lawyer Witte was apparently to show that Barber was so anxious to get to his wife's room and make investigations that he didn't take time to find out who had been shot, although he stepped over the body of Fraser twice in going about the house.

Evans did not seem to take much interest in Barber's testimony. He rolled back in the pen so that he was completely hidden from sight behind the high walls. Barber, on the elevated witness stand, could look down upon the prisoner if he desired, but he never did so.

Went to Get Evidence.

Q.—Didn't you go to that house to get evidence?" asked Lawyer Witte, addressing Mr. Barber. A.—Yes," said Barber.

Q.—Didn't the three detectives go along as witnesses? A.—I presume so, if they saw anything.

Q.—Didn't you have an idea that your wife was acting improperly? A.—Yes. I had an idea that she might be.

This was the first time the real object of the visit to the Evans house had come out in the trial. It shows that Barber waited until it was late at night and then they dashed into the home as quickly as the door was opened to get any evidence they could.

Police to Prevent Trouble.

Q.—Do you know why the police went along? A.—To prevent trouble, if there happened to be any.

Q.—Weren't the three private detectives enough protection? A.—They didn't seem to think so.

Barber said he had written to his wife warning her about his having detectives on her track.

Q.—Did you tell her that you had spent $100 in tracking her? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you tell her you were tracking her? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you tell her you had a complete case against her? A.—Not in those words. I tried to warn her against trouble.

Q.—Didn't you say she would be sent to Sherborn Reformatory? A.—Something like that.

Former Wife Testifies.

Mrs. Rebecca Evans was called to the stand after Lawyer Witte had finished with Mr. Barber. She was formerly married to Evans, the prisoner. She was dressed in white waist, brown skirt and large black hat. Mrs. Evans stood with her back to the prisoner. He looked at her once and then pressed his hands to his forehead.

Lawyer Witte had Mrs. Evans excused from the court room so that he could make a statement about Mrs. Evans to the court. Lawyer Witte was Evans's counsel when the separation was obtained.

"I simply want to say," said Witte to Judge Butler, "that this woman is not the wife of Evans and never was."

Identifying Threatening Letters.

"That can't affect her testimony," said Judge Butler.

Mrs. Evans was brought back into court. Captain Perry questioned her.

"Were you ever married to this man?" asked the captain, pointing to Evans.

"Yes, I was," replied Mrs. Evans in a firm voice.

Q.—When? A.—A year ago last Christmas.

Q.—How long did you live with him? A.—About nine months.

Mrs. Evans then identified the threatening letter received by Barber as having been written by Evans.

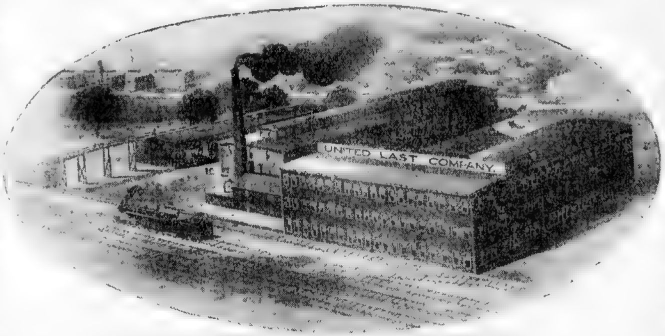
A POPULAR MONOPOLY

"A New England Investment for New England People"

UNITED LAST COMPANY

BOSTON, MASS., U. S. A.



Works of the UNITED LAST COMPANY, Montello Station, Brockton, Mass.

Prospectus

The commercial importance of an invention depends on the number of people who can make use of it.

Every man, woman and child in the United States wears shoes. Every shoe is made upon a wooden Last. Every different style of shoe necessitates a different Last, and, when you consider that every style is made in no less than thirteen different sizes, with half sizes and quarter sizes between, and as many as five different widths in each size, you will gain some idea of the immense number of wooden Lasts required to make shoes for the American people.

According to the last census reports there are about 1,600 manufacturers of shoes in the United States, each manufacturer using from 2,000 to 50,000 pairs wooden Lasts every year. That means a total of something over 4,000,000 pairs wooden Lasts used in America. The Lasts used this year are only so much firewood next year, because the constant change in styles demands a corresponding change in Lasts.

Now, then, if we can show you that the UNITED LAST not only is much better than any other Last made, that it gives the UNITED LAST COMPANY a monopoly of the Last industry, and that all shoe manufacturers are ready to adopt it because it means fully 50 per cent. saving to them, you will naturally conclude that we have an investment worthy the consideration of every thoughtful person. That is exactly what we can prove to you in a very few words.

A Revolution in the Shoe Industry

There has not for more than twenty years been such an epoch-making invention in shoe-making as the UNITED LAST. It marks a revolution in the last-making industry of the world. It vastly increases the profits of the shoe manufacturer—it is more than likely that it may affect prices to the consumer—it will certainly improve the quality of shoes produced.

UNITED LAST, heel elevated.

It saves 50 per cent. to the shoe manufacturer because, while heretofore every Last had to be thrown aside as useless when the style changed, now only a fore part of the Last need be discarded, and the cost of making this change with the UNITED LAST is 50 per cent. less than it would be to supply entirely new LASTS. The detailed description of the UNITED LAST will make this plain.

A Popular Monopoly

Stock of the UNITED LAST COMPANY will prove to be in the near future the most profitable securities ever brought to your attention.

It will pay you to make some figures on the statements presented here.

Monopolies always are popular with those who are fortunate enough to share in them. In this case you may have that opportunity, for a limited amount of stock is now being sold at par, $25 a share. The purpose of this flotation is to secure, with the least possible delay, additional capital to increase our facilities for manufacturing UNITED LASTS to a point where we can take care of the constantly increasing demand for our goods.

The time will come, and that at no distant day, when 90 men out of every 100 who walk our streets will walk in shoes made over UNITED LASTS. When that time comes, and the history of this business is finally written, you will remember this prospectus, and you will remember it gratefully, if you take advantage of the opportunity by securing some of the shares at this time.

In order that you may fully understand and appreciate the exceptional opportunity for safe, conservative, and yet rich investment which this proposition offers, you must know more about the UNITED LAST itself, understand its actual value to the shoe-making industry of the world, and how it is that its own merit will force its speedy and universal adoption.

The United Last

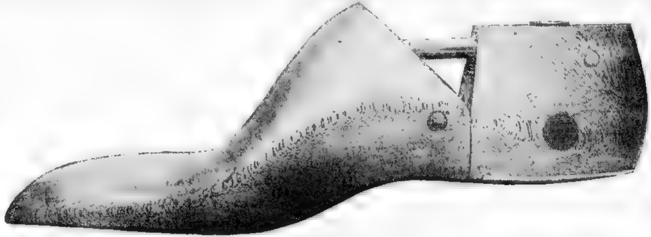
Since the beginning of modern methods of shoe manufacture there has been practically no improvement in Lasts.

For many years the shoe manufacturer has struggled with this question. Every effort to produce an improved Last has met with defeat until the inventions in Lasts now owned by the UNITED LAST COMPANY were perfected and placed on the market.

Nothing better being offered, the shoe manufacturers have submitted to the tremendous expense of equipping their factories with new Lasts to conform with the constant change in styles with every change of season.

The use of the UNITED LAST results in a saving of 50 per cent. of this enormous expense, at the same time producing a superior shoe with less labor and a higher percentage of perfect shoes.

THE UNITED LAST consists of a heel part, a fore part, held in position by a hinge member and a simple locking device. When a change in style occurs, the fore part of the UNITED LAST is discarded and a new style fore part is substituted.



UNITED LAST.

The parts are readily interchangeable. Any style or shape of toe part that may be designed can be attached to the heel part, which is used for a term of years, a feature never before known in Last making. The separation is accomplished by simply removing the pin in the hinge, the new toe is then added, making a complete Last.

The heel part of the United Last is constructed to withstand the heeling machine pressure, is practically indestructible, and may be used year after year, as the styles in heels never change.

The small cost to the shoe manufacturer for UNITED LAST fore parts to meet the constant change in style, as compared with the cost for the Block Last or any other Last, gives the UNITED LAST COMPANY a complete monopoly of the Last business.

What It Saves

Those who are not familiar with the shoe manufacturing industry cannot appreciate the great saving to the shoe manufacturer through the use of the UNITED LAST.

Shoe manufacturers everywhere prefer the hinge Lasts, and have used the Block Last only for the reason that no hinge Last has been invented or manufactured with interchangeable fore parts until the UNITED LAST was placed on the market.

The average shoe manufacturer uses 10,000 pairs of Lasts per annum. The larger factories 30,000 to 50,000 pairs.

On a basis of 10,000 pairs of Lasts, the cost to the manufacturer would be $11,000. The cost for the same quantity of UNITED LASTS fore parts would be $5,500, showing a clear saving of $5,500 a year, or a sum equal to 50 per cent. of the entire Last bill.

The shoe manufacturer who now uses 50,000 pairs of Lasts will, by the use of the UNITED LASTS, save $27,500 a year.

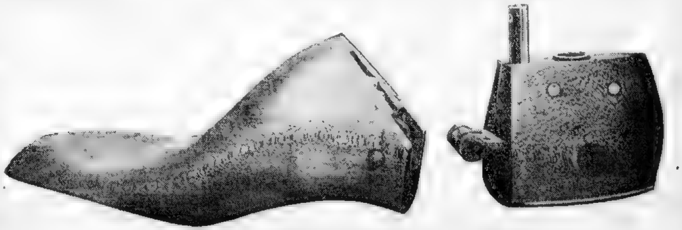
Important Facts

THE UNITED LAST COMPANY has a monopoly of a most important industry. In the United States alone $4,000,000 worth of Lasts are purchased annually.

50 per cent. of the Last business in this country would yield to the Company a profit of more than $1,000,000 annually.

5 per cent. of the Last business will yield a profit to the Company sufficient to pay dividends on both Preferred and Common stock, and earn a surplus. With increased facilities, orders aggregating more than 10 per cent. of the Last business can be booked immediately.

The economy and merit of the UNITED LAST must make its adoption universal.



Parts of the UNITED LAST, fore part and heel part separated.

All the shoe manufacturers are ready to adopt the UNITED LAST because of its many advantages in practical use.

The absolute saving of 50 per cent. in Last bills is ample assurance that no manufacturer, large or small, friendly or otherwise, will delay equipping his Plant with the UNITED LAST.

THE UNITED LAST is the only Last ever invented giving anything approaching a monopoly in the Last business.

Competition

THE UNITED LAST COMPANY, owning and controlling the UNITED LAST, is organized with the broad scope of a complete monopoly, secured by inventions so simple and sweeping in their nature that successful competition is rendered impossible.

THE UNITED LAST will displace all other Lasts.

First, because a better shoe is produced.

Second, because there is absolutely no injury to the shoe in removing the Last.

Third, by the use of the UNITED LAST a saving in labor is made.

Fourth, and of even greater importance than all other advantages, is the saving of 50 per cent. in the shoe manufacturer's Last bill, thereby placing the UNITED LAST outside of any possible competition.

In these days of immense output and keen competition the manufacturer must take advantage of every possible opportunity for saving.

THE UNITED LAST offers a saving so great that every manufacturer must use it or cease to compete with manufacturers who do.

The Works

The factory site, comprising four and a half acres of land, is situated at Montello Station, Brockton, Mass., on the N. Y., N. H. & Hartford Railroad, near the factory of the W. L. Douglas Shoe Company.

The buildings consist of a Last Manufacturing Plant, provided with ample light and heating appliances, and equipped with automatic fire sprinklers, a thoroughly equipped Dry Kiln, with a capacity of 10 carloads of Last Blocks, and a storage building with a capacity of 500,000 dry Last Blocks. The block-making plant is located at Great Valley, N. Y., and is fully equipped to produce rough Last Blocks from the standing timber at the least possible cost.

In our equipment is every modern machine that can be used to advantage in the manufacture of Lasts, and all appliances tending toward economical production are taken advantage of.

United Last Company Stock as an Investment

This prospectus is compiled from facts.

There is not one line of theory in it.

An investment in a concern which can show beyond question its ability to increase its earnings through the increase of capital is worth the consideration of every man who wishes his capital to earn substantial dividends and a profit on the increase in the value of his holdings of stock.

A POPULAR MONOPOLY

"A New England Investment for New England People"

THE UNITED LAST COMPANY offers direct to investors a limited amount of a 7 per cent. Preferred stock at par, $25 per share. A reasonable valuation of the property places no less than $50 worth of assets back of each share offered for subscription. Stock in a manufacturing enterprise offers the safest and soundest investments, yielding the largest and surest returns, as is shown by the wealthy men of the country, who have made their money through investments in industrial monopolies.

This business is fully established, and has a capacity sufficient to enable the Company to earn a surplus in excess of the 7 per cent. dividend on the stock now offered. With the proceeds from this sale of stock, the business will be increased to a point where the value of the Preferred shares will be greatly increased.

There is nothing experimental in this business. It is merely a matter of safely investing your money in the Preferred stock of a corporation that has a monopoly.

THE UNITED LAST COMPANY invests its money directly in its business to gain business profits and to share these profits with you.

This stock affords a thoroughly conservative 7 per cent. investment, which in these times of lowering interest rate is not readily obtainable. The interest is payable quarterly: January, April, July and October.

These advantageous features of the United Last Company, in view of the general distrust of speculative securities, have led to the purchase of its stock by some of the most conservative and far-seeing investors.

Home manufacturing industries have proved to be the most profitable and staple field for investments. They do not fluctuate, but steadily grow in value, paying large dividends, thereby constantly increasing the value of the security.

This stock unites the best in security and the best in profit. No investor can afford to overlook this offering.

We have stated our stock proposition plainly, truthfully. We appeal to your common sense and conservative business judgment. If you wish to take advantage of this for a solid investment, you must think quickly, and act quickly, as only a limited amount of shares are now offered for sale at par, and we are confident that in the near future you will have to pay a premium. A sounder and more conservative investment cannot be offered.

Management

The President and General Manager of the Company is Mr Oliver A. Miller, a gentleman of responsibility, integrity, and proved capacity.

Mr. Miller's connection of thirty years with the shoe industry, and his great success as a manufacturer of Last and Shoe Trees and Treeing Machines, guarantee the success of this enterprise.

For the past two years Mr. Miller has devoted its entire time to the development of the various patents which the Company owns, and towards the perfection of the Plant, which is now completely equipped with special machinery for the successful and economical producing of Lasts protected by these patents.

Under his management and personal supervision the shoe manufacturer may rely upon receiving Lasts of the very best quality in material and construction.

In 1896, while conducting the treeing-machine business, Mr. Miller visited the branch office which had been established at Northampton, Eng., and being quick to see the opportunity for doing a profitable Last-making business there, purchased land, and erected a Last factory on the American plan, fitted it with the latest and best known American machinery for Last making, at a cost of $90,000 ($50,000.)

The business was a success from the first, earning a dividend of 6 per cent. on its Preferred shares, and 8 per cent. on the ordinary shares, and, in addition to this, accumulating a surplus which resulted in the sale of the property, for cash, to the British United Shoe Machinery Company at a net profit of over $50,000.

As a manufacturer of shoe-treeing machines, Mr. Miller quickly gained control of that important branch of the business, and held a monopoly until the business was sold outright in 1902 for cash to the United Shoe Machinery Company.

At the time the property was sold 95 per cent. of the shoe manufacturers in the United States, Canada, England, France and Germany were using the Miller Treeing machine exclusively.

The treeing machine business yielded an income of 50 per cent. annually on the entire capital for a period of twenty-five years! The field for profit making from the UNITED LAST is many times greater than was possible in the treeing-machine business, as the annual demand for tree feet did not exceed 60,000 pairs per annum. The demand for Lasts is 4,000,000 pairs annually, nearly seventy times greater.

Four Styles of UNITED LAST fore parts are here illustrated. The number of styles of UNITED LAST fore parts, interchangeable with UNITED LAST standard heel, is unlimited

To Investors

From my experience in the manufacture of Lasts, Shoe Trees, and Shoe-treeing Machines, covering a period of over thirty years, and my knowledge of the shoe manufacturing business, I am convinced that the entire output of the UNITED LAST COMPANY'S Plant can be sold at 100 per cent. profit. I desire to say to every investor I give my personal assurance that their interests will be protected and safeguarded in every possible manner.

Faithfully yours,
OLIVER A. MILLER, President.

The United Last Company's Proposition

For the purpose of enlarging the Plant to a capacity to enable the Company to take care of the increasing business, 10,000 shares of its 7 per cent. Preferred stock are offered direct to investors at par, $25 per share. 7 per cent. must be paid on this Preferred stock, payable quarterly, before any dividends can be declared on the Common stock.

The Preferred shares take preference in the matter of assets as well as in dividends, which virtually makes them a bond.

A block of stock in the United Last Company will be one of the very best possible investments you can make. It will not only greatly increase in value, but it will yield a regular income.

Subscriptions will be filled in the order of their receipt, thus avoiding the complications which arise from over-subscription. Make all checks payable to the order of HERBERT A. HARRIS, Treasurer, No. 60 State Street, Boston, Mass.

SLEUTHS MUST SHOW MORE PROOF OR MARSH WILL BE FREED IN WEEK

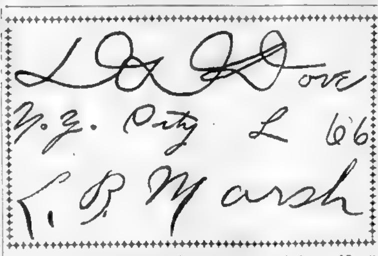
FAIL TO IDENTIFY SUSPECT IN AUTO MURDER CASE.

Detectives Hurrying Back to Chicago In Effort to Connect Brockton Man with Mysterious Auto Tragedy

Brockton, Aug. 19.—George L. Marsh of this city will be set free in one week, if the Chicago police do not produce better evidence than they have so far to warrant his detention here as a fugitive from justice in connection with the murder of William L. Bate, the chauffeur, in Illinois last November.

Judge Reed of Brockton District Court not only freed Marsh to-day from the statutory charge on which he had been held, but also refused to grant more than one week's continuance in the Chicago murder case. He thought this all the Chicago police entitled to, considering that the three men they sent to identify Marsh as the mysterious "Mr. Dove" failed utterly in their attempt at identification.

Detective Sheehan of Chicago and the two witnesses he brought with him have returned to that city. Sheehan told City Marshal Boyden of Brockton he might be able to get other evidence against Marsh, but Marsh, his lawyer and his relatives are confident that the end of the week will bring only one result—the prisoner's freedom. Marsh was sent back to Plymouth Jail to-day, but he expects to leave the jail for good when he is brought here next Saturday for the continued hearing Judge Reed ordered to-day.



D D Dove
N. Y. City L 66
L. B. Marsh

Two samples of handwriting play an important part in the case of George Marsh, whom the Chicago police think is the mysterious "Mr. Dove" of the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago. Mr. Dove is suspected of the murder of Bate.

One of the samples which will be submitted to the handwriting experts is the line taken from the register of the Auditorium. It was made by "Mr. Dove" when he asked for a room. The line reads:

"D. D. Dove, N. Y. City."

The additional "L" and the number "66" were made by the room clerk.

The other sample is the name "L. B. Marsh," which was written on one of the blank forms passed in by Marsh when he made application for a chauffeur's license.

If experts determine that the same man wrote both signatures, Marsh will have been identified as the mysterious "Mr. Dove."

FAMILY LOYALLY STANDS BY MARSH

The annals of Massachusetts jurisprudence hardly furnish a counterpart of the case of George L. Marsh of Brockton, held at Plymouth Jail on a week's continuance as the Illinois auto-murder suspect, in that the accused and his family, the one in jail and the others doing all that can be done for him outside, instead of worrying, actually scoff at the efforts of the Chicago and Brockton police now turning every trick in the legal and circumstantial category to fasten the crime of murder upon him.

The Marsh family is a business family. It consists of the parents and their seven children. Every member is a strong and extraordinary character. Not a weakling has developed, and not a single member has become unnerved in this the greatest trial in the family history. The fond mother has occasionally shed a tear, but she did not turn to hide it, nor remove her straightforward gaze. She alone appears to worry of all the nine, but she hides it with a determination that becomes the iron-nerved family.

An Unusual Prisoner.

Grimly, with set teeth, the father, George R. Marsh, goes from one logical step to the next in his son's defence. The three brothers attend to the making of their famous motor cycles, and the three girls neglect no duties. Whenever a question is asked of one of these the answer is a defiant toss of the head, an ironical smile, a sarcastic challenge to the police to do their worst, and a steadfast confidence in the integrity of the accused. Where they might cry they laugh, but they neglect nothing in the assistance of their imprisoned relative, and there is a cold-blooded method in their joint performance that astounds the close observer. These family members absolutely know that their son and brother is innocent, and they defy the world asking assistance only of the Almighty, for they are Christian people.

George L. (Bennett) Marsh is the most [illegible] prisoner ever confined in Plymouth, so the jailors say. He is happiness personified. His eye is clear and blue and looks straight in the eye of the other fellow. His laugh is hearty and continuous.

Finds Fun in Everything.

Bent and crippled, sick, imprisoned and charged with murder with the shrewdest officers obtainable working for his undoing, Young Marsh finds fun in everything that happens and takes with his keepers at every turn. His only serious moments are when his father calls with inquiries into his welfare, when he makes reply: "Father, don't neglect your work nor your rest, and don't allow the others to lose a wink of sleep or a minute's pleasure on my account. They cannot do a thing to me. Let them look and search and work. I am not a murderer and I regard their plans and performances as purest folly."

[illegible] L. Marsh was never known to hurt anybody, so his friends all say. When a boy he had to be forced a little to make him go to school, yet he acquired a reasonably good education, which combined with his extraordinary mechanical talent, shared by all the male members of the family, made him a very active and useful man wherever he was employed.

Enlisted in the Army.

He became a member of Battery I of Brockton, while quite young, and at the age of nineteen enlisted in the regular army in Rhode Island for the sake of going somewhere. He had previously taken trips to England unbeknown to his folks and laughed them out of all remonstrances. The family applied to Washington for his discharge under the law touching the enlisting of minors. This was not amusing, for they fined him a month's pay for joining the army when too young. He retaliated but taking French leave when he heard that his mother was very ill at home. Because he was about to be sent home the officials let it pass.

George L. Marsh then demonstrated automobiles and motor bicycles about the country. Once an automobile that could not be fixed in Boston was shipped down to his brothers' factory. The brothers turned it over to him. He was ill at the time, but he crawled under it and made the necessary repairs, and the machine ran ever afterward, to the astonishment of all who knew about it.

Ran Over and Killed a Man.

His first setback was when in Chicago. George Marsh accidentally run over and killed a man. The matter went to the court, as a mater of course, and he was acquitted, all witnesses agreeing that he was not responsible. He was known there as "Bennett" Marsh, being nicknamed for James Gordon Bennett.

"Bennett" Marsh's real troubles began about that time, November, 1904. He was taken ill and lame. On the night of November 18, Willie Bates, a friend, was murdered. Both were chauffeurs at the Canary garage. They had eaten supper together. Marsh went out riding at eight with Maurice Stokes, Alice Egan and another young woman. Their machine was crippled and they did not return until two in the morning. Willie Bates was called to take out a mysterious "Mr. Dove" during the same evening. Bates's body was found in his auto thirty-one miles out, near Romeo, Ill., at six next morning shot through the head. Shots were heard there at 12.30 and a man supposed to have been "Mr. Dove" arrived at the railroad station in Joliet at two on the morning of the murder, remaining until six, when he took a train. The telegrapher with whom he talked, was E. J. Startz. The only other man who talked with "Mr. Dove" at the time was Eddie Slavin, clerk at the Auditorium Hotel, in Chicago, when "Mr. Dove" called for the automobile by telephone.

Sought Clue in Letters.

Everything was done by the police and newspapers of Chicago that was possible, but to no effect, towards locating the murderer. The investigation extended to friends of Willie Bate, and when, a month later, "Bennett" Marsh, sick and almost out of money, shipped his dress suit cases ahead to Kansas City and followed at his leisure, his valises were opened and letters from girls were extracted by the police who thought they might show some possible indirect motive.

Marsh arrived home from California about six months ago, grew better and received another setback in a fall while testing a motor cycle in Stoughton. Since that time he has been confined to the house under constant care of a physician and sometimes sleeping out of doors in fear of tuberculosis. Lately he has picked up in flesh and improved generally. A man who formerly knew him in Chicago told a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter that he didn't see but he looked just the same in the face now as when out in Chicago. This was elicited by the report of the Chicago witnesses, who stated that he had changed so much that they could not positively identify him, although he filled the description in every particular.

Located in Brockton.

In April the Brockton police received a circular asking that Marsh be located. Names were confused. "Lawrence," "Bennett," "Dove" and Marsh were combined in different ways. The Brockton police wisely let the matter alone until something substantial should show.

Recently more was ascertained in Chicago. The BOSTON AMERICAN heard the first intimation of a search in Brockton and an AMERICAN reporter found the Marsh family and settled the identity of George L. (Bennett) Marsh.

While the reporter and Captain Tower were discussing the matter a telegram was received addressed to the chief of police instructing that "L. B." Marsh be arrested and held. An AMERICAN reporter accompanied Inspectors Kingman and Grose to the Marsh motor factory, where before they had a chance to state their errand, George L. (Bennett) Marsh greeted them with a broad, frank grin and said, "I guess you fellows are looking for me. I am Bennett Marsh, all right, and I have heard that you were coming."

Witnesses Came East.

The family members steadfastly showed their unqualified confidence in the young man's innocence, while the headquarters' men of Brockton and Chicago bent every effort toward connecting him with the year-old crime.

Inspector Sheehan, who had worked upon the Bate murder in Chicago, collected evidence and came East with two witnesses, Startz, the Joliet telegrapher, and Slavin, the hotel night clerk. They visited Marsh in his cell at Plymouth Friday, but failed to identify him. One of them told him he was not the man. Yet it was held by the police that the description was quite perfect, except for emaciation, and on Saturday Justice Reed, with some apparent reluctance granted the government a week to further perfect its case, holding the prisoner without bail for that time. Chief Boyden appeared as prosecutor and Lawyer McLellan as counsel for the defence.

Marshal Boyden stated that the Chicago party had gone back to reconstruct evidence and if they failed they would let him know and the young man could be released on a habeas corpus.

Sent Back to Jail.

Mr. McLellen declared that it was all a flimsy case, that the officers had ample time, that the boy was too sick to remain confined, and that he had no idea of attempting to flee.

Justice Reed said: "It is a question if I had not better allow further time. Instead of ten days I will allow a continuance of one week, at which time I shall expect the Government to give me satisfactory proofs if the accused is to be further held."

Marsh was sent back to Plymouth jail and the father, mother and sisters, Lydia and Fannie, went back home.

Before leaving the court house, Mrs. Casada Marsh, mother of the prisoner, said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"The BOSTON AMERICAN has written the truth right along. It has perhaps been instrumental in establishing the identity of my son, but that was to be expected, and we had no desire to hide anything. I want to thank the BOSTON AMERICAN again for its truthful position throughout this case, and I feel that what it has published has greatly helped me and mine. The other members of my family join me in thanking the paper."

Marsh Told His Story.

An AMERICAN reporter visited Marsh in his cell at Plymouth early in the week and got the only self-told story of his Chicago connections. Marsh told the facts unreservedly, and hearing that a bloody imprint was upon the automobile, suggested that printers' ink be obtained and gave the AMERICAN reporter impressions from both his hands and all his fingers and thumbs to compare with the blood prints.

It is expected by his family that Marsh will be released some day this week, following a telegram from Chief Collins of Chicago that the investigation is abandoned as far as Marsh is concerned. He could be taken from jail on a habeas corpus and released from custody by the court. Otherwise his case will stand until next Saturday. Then if the Chicago police still desire it and can present sufficient evidence against him to satisfy the Governors of the two States and the judge of the Brockton District Court he may be taken West for trial. It would probably be necessary to first assemble the Grand Jury in Chicago.

POLICE FREE MISS THAYER'S FOOTMAN AT NEWPORT.

'Cop' Who Was Told to 'Shoot Himself,' Because He Said 'Move On,' Now Admires the Beautiful Society Leader

Special to the Boston American.

Newport, Aug. 19.—An entente cordiale has been established between Roger McCormick, the Newport "cop," beautiful Miss Sallie Thayer of Boston and Miss Sallie's doughty footman, "Pat" Darcy.

Furthermore, it is agreed all around that McCormick was not "rude" either to Miss Thayer or to Darcy, although he was first reported to have so far forgot himself.

There was a terrible story to the effect that the "cop" gruffly ordered the footman to "move on," that the chivalrous footman resented this indirect disrespect to his fair mistress and that the cop, uninvited, jumped into the carriage and sat himself beside Miss Thayer and took the wrathful society beauty to the station.

It was this way, however, according to the revised version. Darcy drove Miss Thayer to a dry goods store and waited in the carriage for her to come out.

When ordered to move on Darcy replied, "I don't have to. I'm driving a lady. You go shoot yourself."

At this psychological moment the lovely Miss Sallie herself appeared.

"Why, what's the matter?" she asked sweetly.

"Well, Miss," said McCormick deferentially, "Your driver is under arrest and must report at headquarters."

At the station house Chief Crowley decided to let Darcy off, with the understanding that next time he will "move on."

And admiring Patrolman McCormick, who heard that he had been reported as rude to Miss Thayer, said earnestly to the SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter, "Please say for me that Miss Thayer is a perfect lady and a beautiful lady, too. She was very nice to me."

BULLS RAMPANT IN THE STOCK PASTURE.

TEMPORARY RECESSION FOR PROFIT-TAKING

Slight Setback Came Yesterday From This Cause; Conditions of Strength Stay, Point to Higher Prices

Wall street has agreed with itself that now is the time to make money.

With gleeful caperings the traders gambol about the stock pasture, safe behind a barbed wire fence of prosperity from the grasping maw of growling bears.

It almost seems as if by mutual agreement the stock market has been put on an advancing basis. In other words, the bull market which was slowly developing during several weeks is now so well underway that its impetus seems irresistable.

In fact, there is nothing to check the surging upward movement of stocks. There is still the possibility that Wall street will overreach itself again, as it has done before, but aside from that the speculative horizon is clear. In the [illegible] sky of finance there is not a dark cloud of [illegible]. Buying and more buying are [illegible] in the [illegible] only average intelligence is required for the making of money. [illegible] The names of almost all the active stocks [illegible] be placed in a hat [illegible] one of them selected by [illegible]. As matters are progressing at present, the stock chosen might be bought and sold, bought again and sold again, with profit to the trader. Wall street knows this and is acting accordingly.

Shows Profit-Taking.

Recessions are occurring about on alternate days. Figures of decline after any one session do not mean that there is any cessation of the upward movement. They indicate profit-taking, and this is part of the movement. Without it a bull market, when created by stock manipulators, would have no cause for existence. It would correspond to a business conducted for pleasure, not for profit.

The final materialization of all the bull rumors is now generally admitted. Those who were the most bearish a few weeks ago have jumped on the band wagon, so to speak, and are now among the most enthusiastic participants in the money-making parade. The causes are, aside from the unusual midsummer trading energy, record-breaking crops, increased railroad earnings, a fair peace outlook, an easy money market, general prosperity.

How long the rising tendency can continue is problematical. According to precedent it should have had its reaction by this time. The rise cannot continue forever, and hence the truth of the situation is that it will be well now to make haste slowly. The powers that be may elect to maintain the advance. Just as easily they may have already decided to let matters take a more common sense course by allowing some of the stocks to drop back to where they belong. Still, in most instances prices are justified by underlying conditions and are not purely the result of a general feverish desire to place them on an unheard of level. The condition of the railroads and the other industries, whose stocks are being driven upwards, means actual security of investment.

Big Buying Power.

The buying power created by this fact is now considerable. Manipulators and speculators are working their sweet will on the market, and are getting large profits, but investment buying has been created by the splendid industrial outlook. The standard stocks are being purchased outright by investors, and will be held by them as long as the dividends endure. There is nothing to indicate that dividends will stop before the coming of an earthquake or a revolution.

As for the public, the dear public of finance, it is still timid. General trading for profit has not yet developed, most of the transactions being for those who make it their business to buy and sell every day, year in and out. Heretofore, when the market has been advancing and all the traders were rushing for a piece of the profit pie, the public has timidly appeared at the last moment, when it was too late. When the insiders began to sell short the public bought the stock and pocketed losses. History may repeat itself in this respect, for the public is only just beginning to be a factor in the market. On the other hand, the public may yet be in time, for no one seems to stop the merrymaking over prices.

When the Public Buys.

Another factor of the situation is that when the public does start in to buy, it may create an irresistible and further upward movement. When the public starts in with a firm intention of doing a thing it generally does it. This has proved true in the stock market before. The big interests may decide how the market shall go, and can make it go that way as a rule. But general public buying always interferes sadly with their plans. Great financiers have found themselves powerless to change the course of the market when the public started to trade in earnest. Jay Gould and others, when they thought themselves secure in the position they had taken, found to their cost that they were strangers in their own home when their usually docile public decided to intrude.

A setback in the stock market came yesterday and the day before, but it was ascribed rather to an expected week's loss of money by the banks being taken as an excuse for profit-taking, than to an actual halt in the bull movement. This became the more apparent yesterday when the bank statement was issued. The reserve was shown to have decreased only $3,000,000, approximately, and with such little cause for worry the selling continued. The bank statement has ceased to be a real influence, of itself in the situation, but is still eagerly awaited as a signal for selling or buying. A slight loss in the reserves yesterday simply served as a sign that profit-taking might be continued safely.

Conservatives Timid.

Some of the more conservative interests are feeling a little timidity at the pace which the market has attained, especially in the higher grade securities. The actual volume of the trading, however, furnishes no ground for such apprehension. The market is not particularly active, nor is it broad. Total transactions yesterday amounted to only 260,000 shares. Inasmuch as the market is the net average result of the opinions of all those who deal, it is bound to continue upward until opinion changes or until a large proportion of those who entertain bullish opinions lack resources to support them. In spite of the high prevailing prices the market has never been of a runaway nature, and there is not the slightest reason to think that too heavy burdens are being carried anywhere. Furthermore, whether or not Wall Street will overreach itself ultimately, signs of its downfall are now lacking.

Pennsylvania jumped into the lead yesterday, being active throughout the session. In all, 41,000 shares traded hands. It was believed that some of the stock which was bought to stimulate the market Friday was sold yesterday. The net result of the day's trading, however, was a gain, [illegible] to 145¾. Union Pacific was second in point of activity with 39,800 shares. The stock opened at 135½ and closed at 136, the highest point it reached during the day, at a net gain of ⅝.

Steels in Demand.

The Steels were in fairly good demand. The common gained ⅛ to 36⅝, and the preferred gained ½ to 104½. Amalgamated was also firm, keeping within a fraction of 85 and closing at 85¾, up ½. Delaware & Hudson lost some of its recent sensational advance, closing at 211, off 1. Reading common was fairly active, as compared with the rest of the list, but was inclined to heaviness and lost ⅛ to 112⅝. Missouri Pacific gained 1 to 107¼. Whenever an attempt was made to rally prices a slight selling pressure developed, sufficient to keep quotations at a level slightly under Friday's closing figures. The closing of the market came firm, however, and the net results of the day's trading showed slight advances in the greater part of the list. Trading was dull and commission business was very light.

In Boston the trading was very light, even for a Saturday in midsummer, but the tone was strong. The attendance on the floor of the exchange was the smallest for some weeks. Confidence in materially higher prices for the copper shares continued to exist, being based on the strong position of the metal. The metal market continues very strong with an upward tendency. There is a good inquiry in the market from the big American interests for September and October delivery, and as the producers are reported to be pretty well sold up the indications point almost surely to a continued strength in the metal situation. This should be reflected by higher prices for the copper shares.

Amalgamated in Boston gained ⅝ to 85¾. Allouez gained ¼ to 34¼, Centennial ¼ to 25, Mohawk ⅛ to 55½, United Copper ⅝ to 36⅝. Tamarack lost 3 to 122 and Copper Range gained ½ to 68. The greatest decline was in Pullman which lost 5 points to 250. The annual report on American Agricultural Chemical was given out and was favorably received. The stock was strong, advancing ⅝ to 24⅝. Sentiment among the traders was optimistic regarding the general outlook and a cheerful tone prevailed in spite of the dulness.

PEACE ASSURED, MARKET WILL BOOM.

New York, Aug. 19.—As the only disturbing influence in the stock market just now is the peace conference, Wall Street bankers continued to discuss that matter even after the market closed yesterday. It was the general opinion that Roosevelt's action was the deciding movement and that peace is now certain.

With peace the money to be expended in America on behalf of the Far East would be enormous. A period of reconstruction is certain. Navies are to be rebuilt and the development of railroads promises to be something remarkable. The steel trust is counting on an enormous demand. With the steel trade at home in such good condition, peace will mean boom times for that great industry.

The general trade in the United States has become so active that steel orders are now up to their capacity, but they are about to handle the greatest aggregation of crops in history. Operating officials predict that the Pennsylvania and New York Central will both be blocked within a month with the greatest glut of freight ever put on cars. The coal roads are making the largest earnings in their history, with every prospect that the good times will continue. Labor is well paid and fully employed.

The fruits of prosperity should be reflected in price of stocks. It is true they are at a very high level, but they are really worth more than they were a year ago. Brokers are trying to turn the tide of speculation into the lower priced issues, feeling that there is less danger in that direction.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The amount of Union Pacific first lien 4 per cent. convertible bonds has been reduced to $20,721,000, increasing the stock correspondingly to $175,308,000.

The United States sub-treasury reported a debit balance at the local clearing house yesterday of $69,610.

Heavy rains over the Kansas corn belt have raised estimates of the State's crops to 800,000,000 bushels.

The Rutland securities held by the Merchants Trust Company of New York, have been sold by the receivers to Leo P. Wise of the firm of Wise Bros., and G. Tracey Rogers of Binnington. The receivers will soon pay another dividend of 25 per cent.

Judge Baker of the United States Circuit Court of Indianapolis has decided that even though a public service corporation should accept a franchise agreeing to ownership by the city issuing the franchise after ten years, the agreement could not be carried into effect if a stockholder objected. Under the decision the city of Indianapolis cannot carry out its plan looking to the building of its own gas plant.

It is understood that Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. of New York have formed a syndicate to purchase $9,000,000 of an issue of $10,000,000 of 5 per cent. three-year notes of the Mexican Central railroad. It is also understood that a new corporation known as the Mexican Pacific Railway Company will be formed in connection with a plan to finance recent purchases and certain future extensions.

The Boston Stock Exchange seats of William Bassett and C. E. Hooper are posted for transfer to B. C. Tower and A. E. Masten. Mr. Tower is connected with Hayden Stone & Co. Mr. Masten is senior partner of the banking house of A. E. Masten & Co. of Pittsburg and New York. He is a member of the New York and Pittsburg stock exchanges. It is understood that the seats were sold for $25,000 each.

MR. AND MRS. MARK MURPHY

GO!

AT THE OLD

HOWARD

THIS WEEK

MR. and MRS. MARK MURPHY

A pair who are thoroughly worthy of topping the hottest in bill the Old Howard has [illegible]. Mark is recognized as one of the [illegible] Irish comedians, a delineator of a [illegible] in his own way.

"The Coal Strike"

Mike Mooney .... Mark Murphy
Helen Gowan .... Jane H. Murphy

JAMES RICHMOND GLENROY

Here's where we do a killing the fatted calf stunt over the return of this [illegible] who has been [illegible] jests as [illegible].

THE TWO AVOLOS

A pair of athletes who play the sensation game without any limit. Everywhere they appear they are marked up as the greatest ever. Have you ever [illegible] thrown from [illegible] into the [illegible].

HOEY AND LEE

The [illegible] of New York's [illegible] their [illegible] they [illegible]. An act that is the [illegible].

MURPHY AND FRANCES

The [illegible] medians and the [illegible] who know [illegible] possible, [illegible] at bucking and winging.

GRACE LEONARD

The [illegible] impersonator [illegible] and has a way with her that is irresistible.

THE D'ELMARS

This is a certain sure novelty. An acrobatic act that starts where others stop. Adjectives of superlative degree only apply to their exhibition of [illegible] and barrel [illegible] of comedy goes with it. They excel in original ideas.

RUSSELL and TILLYNE

Collectors and dispensers of nonsense. Their [illegible] variety, [illegible] never wore shoes.

W. W. O'BRIEN

NESSEN and NESSEN

RICH and HARVEY

[illegible] the buck and wing line that are making them famous.

FELMAR SISTERS

Two beauts from [illegible] who can carry away the blue ribbons as [illegible] of comedians. As singers and lookers they are far to the front.

IMPERIAL MUSICAL DUO

FRED BOWMAN

A banjo picker who can give pointers to any other African harpist in the biz. He's also a capital story teller.

BILLY NICHOLS

THE KINETOGRAPH

The best [illegible] to display motion pictures will show a number of new views.

Women's Summer Outerwear

MARKED ONE-THIRD TO ONE-HALF EARLY SEASON PRICES

The time for the final clearance of every p[illegible] Summer Goods has come. The new fall garments are clamoring for room and must be housed. To gain the required space in the least possible time, we have marked down the prices on our [illegible] stock to an average of about one-third their former figures.

Weeks of wearing time for summer garments are still ahead, but the selling season is nearly over, hence these prices.

In many cases lots are small, making an early selection imperative.

Women's 10.00 to 15.00 Silk Dresses for 4.98 and 7.75

It would be simply impossible for us to give you any adequate description of these Dresses. [illegible] of fine quality taffeta in a number of good shades [illegible] which have sold all season at from 10.00 to 15.00 apiece. We offer the balance [illegible] at prices which will [illegible] to clean them out before 10 A. M. Monday.

4.98 AND 7.75

Women's Shirt Waist Suits Reduced to 1.29 and 2.29

We have taken every Shirt Waist Suit remaining in our stock, which formerly sold from [illegible] and included in this lot, the styles and materials are too [illegible] about a dozen styles made of extremely fine quality white lawns, waists neatly pleated and finished with insertions of handsome lace or embroidery; at the price offered the waists alone would be most excellent value. The entire stock at two prices.

1.29 AND 2.29

Women's Linen Suits at 2.98 Value 5.00 to 15.00

Every linen suit in our stock formerly sold at from 5.00 to 15.00 is offered in this lot. The styles include everything from the jaunty "Frocks and Frills" to the [illegible] coat effects so popular this season. The colors are principally white, natural [illegible] but there are a few odd suits in other shades. Remember, every [illegible] marked from 5.00 to 15.00, absolutely without reservation in this one lot 2.98

Women's 2.50 Bathing Suits at 98c

We offer just 20 dozen Bathing Suits at this price [illegible] of excellent quality mohair in black and blue, neatly trimmed with braid [illegible] all worth 2.50. Misses' sizes 14, 16 and 18 years. Ladies' [illegible] as they won't last long at this price........ 98c

Medium Weight Coats at 2.98 Value 7.50 to 10.00

Just 90 coats in this lot, made of good quality coverts and cheviots, in desirable [illegible] and lined throughout with excellent satin or taffeta. These coats are the odds and ends of garments formerly sold as high as 10.00. Just right for early fall wear. Choice now at 2.98

Coats at 4.98 Value 10.00 to 15.00

In this lot we have grouped about 100 coats; they are made of high grade coverts, taffeta and pongee silks, in a wide range of desirable styles; they represent the odds and ends of lines which sold early in the season from 10.00 to 15.00. Your choice while they last at 4.98

Rain Coats at 6.98 Value 12.50

Every garment guaranteed showerproof [illegible] the most wanted styles and shades shown this season, not every size in any one style but you will [illegible] in some style. We offer these garments for quick clearance at a price which [illegible] alone, namely 6.98

Final Clearance Prices on Misses' and Girls' Outerwear

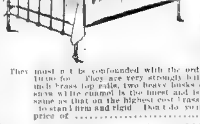
Among the Many Special Bargains In This

Great August Furniture Sale



These Take Precedence This Week

$10.00 Brass Trimmed Enamel Iron Beds for 5.75

Here's a bargain that we think was never equalled. One of the leading iron bed manufacturers has made for us 1000 of this special pattern heavy brass trimmed beds at so low a price that we can offer them for less than half value. He made them at a time when his factory would otherwise have been idle and gave us the beds at actual cost to him to make.

They must not be confounded with the ordinary enameled Iron Beds. They are better in every respect than most beds you'd pay [illegible] for. They are very strongly built and [illegible] yet [illegible] and have 1 1-16 inch posts with 1 inch brass top rails, two heavy husks on each and [illegible] large brass spindles on both head and footboard. The snow white enamel is the finest and is perfectly smooth, while the [illegible] on the brass parts is exactly the same as that on the highest cost brass beds. They come in 3 ft., 4 ft., 4 ft. 6 and we guarantee them to stand firm and rigid. Don't do yourself the injustice to miss securing one or more of them at the ridiculous price of 5.75

Combination No. 1—This same bed fitted with a 5.00 National Spring and White's Combination Mattress, upholstered in fancy tick, the ordinary price for which would be 19.95, may be had in this special sale for 12.75

Combination No. 2—This bed fitted with National Spring and pure white cotton felt mattress, upholstered in fancy satin finish tick, the ordinary price for which would be 27.00, may be had in this special sale for 18.75

Combination No. 3—This bed fitted with National Spring and special hair mattress, upholstered in fine grade tick, a combination that would cost under ordinary circumstances at least 31.00 may be had now for 23.75

Combination No. 4—This bed fitted with upholstered spring and special hair mattress, upholstered in your choice of tick, a splendid outfit that could not be bought ordinarily for less than 39.50, may be had in this sale for 32.75

Waists, Jackets, Negligee Gowns, &c.

[illegible] never [illegible] on summer goods before the wearing season is [illegible] half over. But we've got to sell them all before we [illegible] our fall goods and these prices are made for quicker sales.

NET CLOSES ABOUT SUSPECTED MURDERER OF MATTIE HACKETT

Clue After Clue Followed Up and an Arrest Is Now Expected Within a Day or Two. Woman May Be Involved in Unravelling Mystery of Cruel Murder of Young Girl.

Special to the Sunday American.

Readfield, Me., Aug. 19.—Arrest may be made within a day or two of the murderer of Mattie Hackett, the girl who was strangled and left dying within a few yards of her father's farmhouse at Kent's Hill Thursday night.

A net of circumstantial evidence is being woven. The warp is in. The woof is expected to be supplied tomorrow or Monday. The whole is expected to make a net which, while it may be entirely circumstantial, will be strong —far stronger than many a chain of evidence upon which accused prisoners have been condemned to the gallows or electric chair. The net, it is believed will contain the common strands of love, jealousy and revenge. It may close about a woman.

All day to-day Sheriff Frank J. Ham of Kennebec County, Deputy Sheriff Fred W. Brown of Readfield and County Attorney Thomas Leigh of Augusta listened to the stories of those who knew anything of the crime and investigated the faint clues that exist as to the possible identity of the murderer.

MYSTERIOUS WOMAN APPEARS.

These clues may be summarized thus:

1—The mysterious woman seen walking with bowed head in the direction of the Hackett home ten minutes before the murder, who passed Charles Bean, Marcel Williams, Bert Davis and Mr. Hawkes and did not pass the house of Mr. Nickerson, a few rods farther up the road, indicating that she slipped into a field that might have given access to the Kent's Hill road.

2—A threat that is said to have been made against Miss Hackett by a woman.

3—Another said to have been made by a man.

STRING WHICH CHOKED GIRL.

4—The string with which Miss Hackett was strangled, which is of the kind commonly used to tie up large and heavy bundles, such as packages of newspapers, and which chances to be of the kind that is used in all the prisons of the State.

5.—The peculiar condition that of the three knots in the cord all should be different, indicating either that different people tied them or that the person was skilled in the tying of knots of many kinds, or that he was so unskilled that he could not tie the same kind of a knot twice.

6—Miss Dexter's identification of Alfred Johnson, who was with Farmer Hackett at the time his daughter was murdered, as one of a party of four tramps whom she saw together at a cross roads at North Wayne.

7—The fact that Miss Hackett's half washed dishes were found in the kitchen, with the dish cloth dropped on the table, indicating that she left the house of her own accord with some one she knew and believed to be friendly, to take a short walk down the road. Had she believed the walk was to be long she would have notified her father, in the barn.

8—The fact that Johnson and Mr. Hackett heard the laugh and exclamation just previous to the muffled and choking cry, indicating that up to the very moment of the murderous attack Miss Hackett had believed her companion to be a friend.

Of these clues the first is the most improbable and yet the clearest of all that has yet been discovered. The officials spent much time in following it up to-day and their efforts were rewarded to a certain extent. There is no question that such a person passed up the road from the [illegible] whose name has not been published, able to prove his distance from the crime [illegible] would [illegible] to him as perhaps knowing something of the crime.

Had not Alford Johnson been in the stable doing the chores with Mr. Hackett, had he gone on down the road instead of remaining to supper, every finger of circumstance would have pointed to him, and his identification by Miss Dexter of North Wayne to-day as one of the quartette of men she saw would have made his innocence extremely hard to prove.

Johnson still insists absolutely that he was not with the three men at any point this side of Leeds Junction. His story is borne out by a man who says he gave him a lift along the road for four miles, and who says he was alone. The three men who were released with Johnson on Thursday from the Auburn Jail, where they had been serving short sentences for vagrancy, were found to-day at Livermore Falls and placed under arrest. They are James Brennan, John McEachern and Richard Love.

To-morrow morning they will be taken to the jail at Augusta, where they will be confronted by Miss Dexter and by Johnson.

It is no more than the truth, however, that neither Sheriff Ham nor any other official to-day believes that the tramps had anything to do with the murder of Mattie Hackett.

They will look for the assassin much nearer home.

Tramps would have robbed as well as [illegible] Miss Hackett's watch was on her dress when her nearly lifeless body was borne into the house.

She would not have gone down the road with tramps. She would not have joked with tramps.

While the men are likely to be held for a while, they have actually been eliminated as a factor in solving the puzzle of who killed Mattie Hackett and why.

It might seem significant that the cord with which Miss Hackett was garroted is of the same size and material as that used in the jail at Auburn to tie large packages, but it is a very common kind of twine, of which a sample could probably be found in every large newspaper office in the country, as it is of the kind and size almost invariably used for tieing large bundles of newspapers.

Theory As to Knots.

This might explain the difference in knots. The cord may have been around a package of newspapers. One of the three knots looks as if it might have been tied by the professional delivery department man in the course of his work. The second may have been done leisurely by the murderer to unite ends that had been cut in unfastening the papers. The third is the noose that was hurriedly made when the murder was committed.

A careful [illegible] of all the stores within several miles has failed to find any new cord of the same size. Nor can any person receiving papers recall the disposition of any of the cord that might have come on a newspaper bundle and assist in furnishing a clue to the perpetrator of this murder.

At least one suspect is under rigid espionage to-night.

To say this much will not tend to defeat the ends of justice, because so closely is the person under suspicion being watched that any attempt to escape would only fasten the arrest that will probably occur if an investigation along certain lines turns out as appears probable.

The person who is being watched is believed to have had the opportunity to have committed the murder and to fit the deductions that must be made from the known facts.

Motive Still a Mystery.

But one thing is uncertain in the minds of those who have the investigation in hand. The motive is at present not entirely clear. With that supplied, an arrest would have been made this afternoon.

If Sheriff Ham succeeds in securing the evidence that will warrant him in making an arrest to-morrow or Monday it will be one of the most speedy solutions of one of the most mysterious cases in the history of New England.

Since the morning after the murder, Sheriff Ham has worked unceasingly. Deputy Sheriff Brown, who was summoned within a half hour after the girl's body was found in the road, has slept hardly fifteen hours since that moment.

To these men, assisted by the advice of County Attorney Leigh, will be due the credit for a remarkably quick round up of an apparently inexplicable crime.

Should the developments of the next twenty-four hours render the clues that to-night seem important, less valuable, it is planned to bring into the county the most skilful detectives that can be obtained.

The State of Maine has a fund for the special investigation of crimes. It is at the disposition of the chief law officer of the State and Attorney General Hannibal E. Hamlin, of Ellsworth, to-night telephoned to Sheriff Ham that at his request he would secure the best detective talent that could be hired and set it to work upon the Readfield clues.

Who [illegible]

The [illegible] Hackett [illegible] jealousy or dislike, have been [illegible] lowed. None of them have [illegible] ly verified, and the men who [illegible] have been feared by Miss Hackett [illegible] who [illegible] and the others had not kept their heads has an alibi as perfect as the evidence of many of the town's most prominent citizens can make it. It is proven on the evidence of more than one person that at the actual time of the murder this man was [illegible] way.

INNOCENT IN DANGER.

It is illustrative of the weakness, at times, of circumstantial evidence, that but for fortuitous accident, either of two men might to-day be under arrest, unjustly charged with murder.

Were not the man whose former regard for Miss Hackett has been discussed, but

The country folk from miles around will attend the funeral to-morrow afternoon, for everybody knew and liked Mattie Hackett and the day makes it possible for all [illegible] present.

[illegible] the murderer will be present. He or she must have been a friend to get her to go to walk, and won't dare to stay away for fear it will be noticed," said a neighbor to-day.

Well, stranger things have happened in the annals of crime.

Three Theories in Mysterious Murder of Mattie Hackett

FIRST—That she was murdered by a married man, who is a former suitor, and who committed the crime in a frenzy of jealous anger. SUPPORTING FACTS: A statement of the girl four days previous to her murder.

SECOND—That she was murdered by tramps, the motive being explained by her condition when found. SUPPORTING FACTS: One tramp was with her father when she was slain, and had been seen with several others nearby.

THIRD—That she was murdered by a jealous woman, possibly the wife of a former suitor. SUPPORTING FACTS: Strange woman seen near scene of crime that night, footprints of a woman leading from scene of murder.

STRANGE WOMAN IN MURDER MYSTERY

Special to the Sunday American.

Readfield, Me., Aug. 19.—Mystery [illegible] the murder of Mattie Hackett by [illegible] in the [illegible] It is agreed that the [illegible] 8.25 o'clock. At a few moments after 8, Mr. Hawkes, whose farmhouse is on the [illegible] crossroads, saw a strange woman pass. She was heading toward the west and there was something about her appearance, he cannot say just what, that attracted his attention.

Fifty yards up the road from Mr. Hawkes's house the woman met a [illegible] containing Marcel Williams and Bert Davis. The woman's gait and general appearance attracted their attention.

"That looks like a man dressed up in woman's clothing," said one to his companion.

They turned their heads and watched her until she disappeared in the dusk. They describe the stranger as large for a woman, with stooped shoulders and a mannish gait. She wore a dark dress and a flat straw hat.

Still a little further up the road is the farmhouse of Charles Bean. He noticed the woman, and also noticed that she was a stranger. He was not at the front of his house, but in the orchard, and got no distinct view of her.

Just beyond Mr. Bean's house is a steep hill, at the top of which is the Nickerson farm. Mr. Nickerson was in front of his house from the time Mr. Williams and Mr. Davis passed until the alarm of murder was given. He is positive the woman did not pass there.

A short cut to avoid observation across the fields back of Mr. Nickerson's house would bring the stranger out on the Kents Hill road at a point nearly opposite the [illegible] house, at just about the point Mattie Hackett was so cruelly murdered.

Who was the woman, if it was a woman?

How did she escape observation if she passed the houses farther up the road?

Why, if she passed over back of the Nickerson house and came out upon the Kents Hill road, should she wish to harm Miss Hackett?

LYON RECEIVED LETTER ON DAY OF THE MURDER

Lester P. Lyon, the young South Boston man said to have been the fiance of Miss Mattie C. Hackett, says he had not seen [illegible] week in July, according to his mother, although he has received several letters from the girl, one written the day before she met her death.

Young Lyon is employed as a salesman in the shipping department of the [illegible] Brigham Company, at No. 51 Chatham street. Yesterday, when a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN [illegible] young man, he was denied permission to talk with him, being told that [illegible]

Mrs. A. S. Lyon, his mother, is much [illegible] with the matter.

Received Letter Thursday.

[illegible] Mattie [illegible] last week of July," she said yesterday, at her home, No. 154 M street, South Boston. "He was in Kents Hill [illegible] vacation and spent some time with the girl. He received a letter from her Thursday night, on the very day the poor girl was murdered.

"My son has been at work every day this week, and is at work to-day, although the affair has preyed upon his mind awfully. The statement in some of the papers that he has been engaged to Miss Hackett and was to marry her is untrue. Miss Hackett was a very dear friend of our family and was a welcome guest at our home here, but she was never at any time engaged to Lester.

"I first met the girl last Winter, when she spent a few days here. She was a very [illegible] liked her very much. Lester was simply a friend of hers, and by no means affianced to her."

At McLellan & Brigham's the foreman under whom young Lyon is at work said [illegible] was seen in the store every day last week.

"Lyon has had all the advertising in this matter he ought to have," said the foreman. "He does not want to see anyone on this matter, and I cannot allow anyone to talk with him. He is a good, clean [illegible] and is all right. He does not care to talk on the matter."

Lyon received a telegram from Miss Hackett's father telling of his daughter's murder. Lyon's mother says the young man [illegible] go to Kents Hill to attend the funeral, but it is doubtful.

DEAD GIRL'S SISTER BROKEN BY GRIEF AT HOME OF DEATH

Readfield, Aug. 19.—Miss Evelyn A. Hackett, a year older than Mattie, has arrived home from the Mount Washington House, where she was employed for the summer.

The scene at the railroad station, when she was met by friends of the family, was pathetic in the extreme. She had kept her spirits up as best she could during the long ride [illegible] the White Moun

MYSTERY SHROUDS WORK OF BRUTAL READFIELD SLAYER

BLIND TO FATAL CORD, MIGHT HAVE SAVED GIRL'S LIFE

Special to the Sunday American.

Readville, Me., Aug. 19.—"If I had only discovered that fatal cord about Minnie's neck she might be alive now," moans Farmer Hackett, father of Mattie Hackett, the girl who was strangled to death at Kents Hill.

"I found Mattie lying on the ground. There was blood on her face. I ran to Mr. [illegible] house. I was so bewildered I did not know which way to turn. I realize now that I might have saved her life if I [illegible] to her first, but I thought she was dead.

"Not till after she was brought into the house did I notice the cord around her neck. Had I seen this and removed it when I found her beside the roadside, I believe she would be living to-day. It is [illegible] that makes the burden harder to bear, as Dr. Milliken says she died of strangulation.

GEORGE ADE BOWS BEFORE CURTAIN AS PLAYWRIGHT.

"The College Widow" Has the Boards at Crowded Tremont, and Eight Calls Serve as Climax to Football Contest

A tumult of applause and persistent calls for the author by an audience that filled the Tremont Theatre, was the welcome Boston gave last evening to George Ade's comedy "The College Widow."

The demonstration came after the third act, in which occurs the exciting football game between the rival colleges of Atwater and Bingham. Eight times the curtain was raised and lowered to appease the riot of approval in front, but not until Ade himself appeared and expressed in a characteristic, modest little speech his appreciation and complimented the members of the company and Henry W. Savage, did the enthusiasm subside.

The play is bubbling over with comedy and witty repartee, and has an atmosphere of life in a small college town depicted in the inimitable vein of Ade. There is a touch of romance, at least one intensely dramatic climax, and a group of character studies that are at once familiar to the college men and to those who come in contact with him at his alma mater.

Frances Ring is the widow, and Thomas Meighan, who was seen here last Winter in the all-star cast of the "Two Orphans," plays the part of Billy, the hero. The remainder of the cast is practically the same as the original that produced the play in New York.

87-YEAR-OLD FATHER OF BABY OPPOSES RACE SUICIDE.

"Live Simply, Eat Simply and Don't Worry," He Says, "Is My Receipt for Long and Vigorous Life of Rectitude"

Special to the Sunday American.

Acworth, N. H., Aug. 19.—Ephraim Wright, eighty-seven years old and father of a bouncing baby boy, says that the "simple life and lack of worry" are great preventives of race suicide.

"My receipt for long and vigorous life is to live simply, eat simple foods, have quiet surroundings and do not worry," says he, "and you must not be too active, as that deprives you of vitality."

"I never gave race suicide much thought, but if there is any race suicide it is because the people live too fast in their younger days. We old fellows who have always lived on a farm, have always brought up pretty good sized families, as in my case.

"I think the reason that a man does not have many children is often because he does not live right. He has too much on his mind. Ancestry also has something to do with it.

"I think what makes a man grow old is worry and brain work. The farmer who has spent his life tilling the soil is young in action and spirit, if not in number of years, and he generally has a pretty good family around his hearthstone and the children are always rugged and healthy, instead of the puny kind."

50 TONS SULPHUR TO FIGHT FEVER

New Orleans, La., Aug. 19.—Fifty tons of sulphur were distributed free among householders here today, to be used in the fumigation of their homes, with the hope of killing all the yellow fever.

The sulphur fumes, while dealing death to mosquitos and all insects are stifling. For the past month it has been a common occurrence to see smoke emanating from such fumigation escaping from residences and stores in various parts of the city and with almost every householder using it tomorrow it is expected that the town will be a mass of smoke from morning until night.

Many people left to-day to avoid the fumes, but 300,000 people will be here to inhale it to-morrow.

One of the most serious features of the reign of the quarantine in Mississippi is the abandonment of train service. Not a railroad in the State is running its usual quota of freight or passenger trains, and each day the service is curtailed.

MAN HELD UP BY 2 WOMEN AND ROBBED

Lynn, Aug. 19.—John W. McLaughlin, living at No. 5 Clinton Place, was held up in a dark alley by two colored women to-night, knocked down and robbed of $12 and a gold sovereign in English money. The police have under arrest a colored woman giving her name as Lulu Golden of No. 161 Pleasant street, Boston, charged with being one of the women in the hold up.

McLaughlin says he was at the corner of an alley leading off Central avenue when he was seized from behind. His coat was torn off and the money taken from his pockets. He grabbed one of his assailants, who were women. Patrolman [illegible] came up and found McLaughlin holding on to the Golden Woman's arm.

EVANGELISTS IN TENDERLOIN MARCH

New York, Aug. 19.—Five hundred evangelists will "do" the Upper Tenderloin, the "white light" district on Broadway, to-night.

They will do it with song and cymbal and with exhortations for the "simple life" of religion and devotion.

A Friend in Need—

THAT thin, little, 10-cent Box of Cascarets.

When carried constantly in your Vest Pocket, or in "my Lady's" Purse it will ward off ninety per cent of Life's ordinary Ills.

* * *

Want of Exercise, Indoor Employment, weaken the Bowel Muscles, just as they weaken Arm and Leg Muscles.

The Muscles lose tone, tension, strength, to force the food onward.

And the longer they stay in that state the weaker they become, because the less exercise they get through the slow passage of food.

Cascarets contain the only combination of drugs that acts on the Muscles of the Bowels and Intestines, just as Cold Water, or Exercise, act on a Lazy man.

They act like Exercise.

* * *

When you have Heartburn, Colic, Coated Tongue, Suspected Breath, Acid-rising-in-throat, Gas-belching, or an Incipient Cold, take a Cascaret.

Remember, all these are not merely Discomforts, but indications of a serious Cause.

They act like Exercise on the Bowel-Muscles that propel Food, and that squeeze the natural Digestive Juices of the body into Food.

Constipation Bad Breath
Biliousness Diabetes
Indigestion Headache
Dyspepsia Diarrhœa
Torpid Liver Flatulence
Appendicitis Hives
Rheumatism Jaundice
Catarrh Nausea
Colic Vertigo
Scrofula Pimples
Womanly Troubles
Worms Blotches
Piles Eczema
Ulcers Dysentery

In such cases a little Cascaret in time is worth fifty dollars worth of Treatment later on, to say nothing of the suffering, discomfort, loss of Business Energy, and loss of Social Sunshine it saves.

* * *

A coming Headache can be warded off in short order, by a single Cascaret, and the cause removed.

Heartburn, Gas-belching, Acid-risings in the throat, and Conky feeling are sure signs of bowel trouble from food poisons, and should be dealt with promptly.

One Cascaret will stop the coming trouble, and move on the Bowel load, if taken at the first signs.

Don't fail to carry the Vest Pocket Box of Cascarets with you constantly.

* * *

A thousand dollars a year spent in amusements could not buy for you half so much hearty Happiness, solid Comfort, cheerful Temper and Health Insurance as that little Ten Cent Box of Cascarets.

All Druggists sell them—over ten million boxes a year.

Be very careful to get the genuine, made only by the Sterling Remedy Company and never sold in bulk. Every tablet stamped "CCC."

A sample and the famous booklet, "Curse of Constipation," Free for the asking. Address Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago or New York.

New York, Aug. 19.—While the mystery [illegible] the identity of the young New York woman who, as Mrs. Kate L. Lampson, brought suit in the Supreme Court for absolute divorce from her husband Harry G. Lampson of London, would not be dispelled by her attorney to-day, one of the most remarkable stories of wealth, passion and romance—involving one of the proudest families of Europe and a family of wealth and integrity in New York [illegible] ever recorded in the annals of the divorce tribunal was brought to light.

Harry G. Lampson, against whom the suit is directed, is the grandson of the late Sir George Lampson, baronet, of Albert [illegible] England, commodore of the Royal [illegible] Yacht Club, and the father of the present baronet, Sir Curtis George. DETECTIVES GUARD GRAVE OF STEEL MAGNATE.

Wife of Alan Wood Engages Room Close to Graveyard During Deadlock with Children Over $3,000,000 Estate

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Aug. 19.—Fearful that an attempt might be made to remove the body of her husband from Mount Kensico Cemetery, Goldie Mohr Wood has engaged private detectives to guard the grave. Moreover she has rented an apartment for herself in a house near the burial grounds. The windows overlook the receiving vault where the former steel magnate's body temporarily rests.

Two detectives, hired by her, took their posts near the vault yesterday morning, and at midnight were relieved by two others.

There is still a deadlock between Mrs. Wood and the children regarding her share of the $3,000,000 estate. That the sons and daughter of Alan Wood are at least willing to hear [illegible] from the other side is shown by the fact that the trustees of the estate have held several conferences [illegible] Henry Catlin, Mrs. Wood's attorney, though so far nothing has [illegible] of them.

Mitchell, of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Myron C. Wick of Youngstown, O., and Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Childs of Pittsburg, Pa.

At least 2,500 people were present, representing society from all parts of the country. In the water polo contest the Boston [illegible] team won over the Magnolias by a score of three to one. The 100-yard swimming match was easily won by George Washburn of Greenwich, Ct., one of the athletes of Yale.

A [illegible] race for four-paddle canoes was won by Pierpont Dutcher, Otto Stack, [illegible] Harry Curry. The half [illegible] was won by James Green of the [illegible] swimming club. Harry [illegible] of Pittsburg, Pa., won the sixty yard hurdle race. A forty yard race for boys was won by Harold Garrison of Philadelphia.

BEGIN TO-DAY TO READ JACK HARKAWAY'S SON

MOST THRILLING STORY OF ADVENTURE EVER PRINTED IN A NEWSPAPER

BY CAPTAIN RICHARD RUDD,
Author of "Who Killed Gerald Brown?"

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner

CHAPTER I.
His Father's Son

JACK HARKAWAY, man of many adventures, is [illegible] but his son, who bears his father's [illegible] seems to have succeeded also to his bravery, and at the age of eighteen his adventures in New York bid fair to become even more eventful and exciting than the marvellous escapades of his father.

And when Jack Harkaway's son undertook to aid his Uncle Dan, who came to this country years ago, in his search for the treasure of Captain Kidd, guided by an old parchment map of the hiding place on Long Island Sound, he little dreamed of the danger he was running and the wonderful adventures he was to pass through before his nineteenth birthday.

For the men who so many times came near taking the life of Jack Harkaway the elder were well aware of the search for pirate gold, and laid deep and devilish plans to secure the booty for themselves.

He had often been told of the map, and once or twice had been permitted to look at it, but his uncle had never entrusted him with the key of its contents, for it was written in a language composed of signs and figures that required careful study to understand.

One night, however, Jack's uncle met him, as the boy was going out to the theatre, and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Jack," he said. "If you were the same sort as your father you could help me out of a very deep hole to-night."

The boy's eyes snapped.

"I'm my father's son," he said. "I guess I can do anything he could do at my age, and perhaps a little more."

His uncle, looking troubled and perplexed, led him to the window.

"Do you see anybody out there in the street?" he asked.

"Yes," answered Jack, "there is an old duck with a last year's straw hat on, who looks as if he was waiting for somebody."

"He is," said Uncle Dan uneasily. "He is waiting for me."

"[illegible]" [illegible] Jack in surprise, "why don't you [illegible] him?"

[illegible] at his uncle, and saw that he was [illegible] pale and trembling from [illegible].

"[illegible] do that," he said, "the man [illegible]"

"[illegible] I guess we'd better [illegible]"

His [illegible] the curtains and, [illegible] to sit [illegible] leaned forward [illegible] whisper

"[illegible] you, my boy, with a [illegible] and you must know [illegible] that it is full of danger [illegible] will require a great deal of skill [illegible] to carry it out."

"[illegible]" said Jack, "it will be the [illegible] of my life."

"It will if you succeed," said Uncle Dan. "[illegible], and I'll tell you what it is. [illegible] remember the map—the map of Kidd's treasure island?"

Jack nodded excitedly.

"Well," continued his uncle, "to-night I was to meet a man at Erie Basin who is waiting with a submarine boat he and I have fitted out, and we were to start to dig up that treasure."

The boy's eyes glistened. "Go on!" he said, [illegible] with interest.

"Somehow or other," said the uncle, "a crowd of the wickedest scoundrels that infest New York has discovered our purpose, and that is one of them waiting for me there now."

"Humph!" said Jack. "It would be easy enough to call a cop and have him put out of the way, wouldn't it?"

"If I did his pals would undoubtedly kill [illegible] sooner or later. [illegible] never let [illegible] out of this house with that map."

"But if you got a cab or an automobile they couldn't catch you," suggested Jack, who was always resourceful.

"No hope of that. They have other sentinels watching all the street corners, and you know you can't exceed the speed limit very much without getting arrested. Then they could overtake and follow me."

"Well," said Jack impatiently, "I don't see what you're going to do, nor where my part of the business comes in."

His uncle leaned forward and in a voice so low that Jack could hardly catch it, he said:

"You must take that map to Erie Basin. They don't know you. The leader of the gang is Hunston, your father's oldest and [illegible]. He has long ago forgotten you, although he kidnapped you when you were a child. He knows me too well and so do his pals."

"Do you mean to say that I am going to find the treasure, instead of you?" exclaimed Jack, in delight.

"That is exactly what I mean, Jack," replied his uncle, looking cautiously about him. "My old friend Dick Harvey is on the submarine. You must take the map and the key and go to him. You will be [illegible]

"He dare not stay where he is longer than this afternoon for fear these rascals will locate him, for they know of our plan."

"And why hunt for the treasure now?" asked Jack, who began to feel a trifle alarmed at the prospect of so much responsibility.

"I have lost my entire fortune, Jack," said his uncle, "and unless I can get that treasure I am ruined, and so are all of us. I hate to burden you with this errand, but it is of the most vital importance, and I know you have a heart like your father's."

The boy tiptoed over to the window. Under the street light he could easily see the man outside, walking back and forth as if waiting to keep an appointment, and making an effort to conceal his interest in the house from which Jack watched him.

"Give me the map," he said, "the sooner I go, the better."

With nervous fingers the old man reached into an inside pocket and drew forth a roll, done up in waterproof paper, like a set of architect's drawings.

"Here," he said, "is the map, and inside is the key. If these fall into the hands of anyone else, it settles me for good, and you will have to earn your own living henceforward. But I know they will be safe in your hands."

"[illegible]" said Jack, confidently.

"Walk along the docks at Erie Basin," continued the uncle, "until you see a craft that looks like a torpedo boat with a deck [illegible] board her quietly and say 'Jack Harkaway' to the first man you see. [illegible] see you again till you have found or lost the treasure. Good-by, my brave boy, good luck."

Jack took his hand, and choking back a tear at the sight of the old man's pitifully anxious face, got his cap, left the house by the front door and walked boldly down the street.

When he had reached the corner he looked back.

The man was following him.

At the next block he turned.

Still the man was following, hardly more than a hundred feet behind.

Did he know the boy's errand? If not why was he following him, instead of guarding his uncle's dwelling?

Without pausing to debate the question, Jack scurried into the subway station, bought a ticket and dashed aboard a train that had just pulled in.

The bridge was almost deserted and he fled up the steps and out along the promenade, thinking the man would seek him on one of the cars, if he really knew his destination.

For a few seconds he heard only his own footfalls ringing through the big empty bridge structure, but presently they seemed to be echoed.

He slackened his pace and listened.

He could distinctly hear the sound of a man running, and not very far behind.

The boy stopped to hear no more.

[illegible] fainter and fainter. He felt that he was making his way to safety, when a policeman suddenly stopped him and demanded why he was running so fast at such a time at night.

Jack knew that to try to run then would mean the taking of a chance at being brought down with a bullet, and hastily thinking of an excuse, replied that his mother was sick and he was hurrying home with medicine.

He had by this time reached the first pier, and the policeman backed him suddenly down on one of the benches.

"That's a good tale, but it don't go," he said. "If yer in such a hurry, why don't ye take a car?"

Jack could say nothing.

Presently the policeman pricked up his ears.

"Hello," he said, "here comes another guy with medicine for mother. Is he with ye or after ye?"

Stepping suddenly out, he intercepted the runner.

He sprang at the bluecoat and both men fell to the floor, rolling over and over, while Jack, with a hand on his pocket to make sure that the map was safe, started to run toward Brooklyn.

But the policeman was first to regain his feet, and blew loudly on his whistle.

The next instant there was another sound of running feet, and in a minute the policeman's supposed victim darted up the bridge and brought up opposite Jack, discovering the boy's form out on the iron framework.

"You rascally kid!" he exclaimed, panting for breath. "I'll get that map before they get me, anyway. Give it to me, or I'll drop you off that bridge like a pigeon."

That was all Jack needed.

Swinging by his hands from the girder, he closed his eyes, let go, and with a roar in his ears, and a giddy, sickening sensation in the pit of his stomach, shot downward through space like a cannonball.

When he recovered consciousness he heard voices all around him but felt too sick to pay much heed to them.

"He's coming to again. Give him a little more brandy."

A cup of strong liquor was poured into his mouth, and he sat up and spat it out.

"Where am I?" he asked, remembering that the same question had been asked by people recovering from fainting spells since the world began.

"Why, it's young Harkaway," said the voice, and, Jack, looking about him for the [illegible] he was on a boat, and that the boat could be none other than a submarine.

"Is Harry here?" he gasped.

"He's here," replied the voice, grimly, "but he's below for safe keeping. I'm running the boat now. My name's Hunston, and I've seen you before if I don't mistake, young fellow."

CHAPTER II.
The Chase of the Submarine

Hunston, discovering the plan of Jack's Uncle Dan and Harvey to set out in search of the treasure, had captured the submarine they had built for that mission, and was taking Harvey to what he supposed to be the scene of the pirate's last money burial.

The delay of Uncle Dan in reaching the trysting place had probably resulted in the capture.

How it had been effected Jack could only guess, but from what his father had told him of Hunston, he knew that Harvey had been lucky to escape with his life.

As he sat among his captors, for there were two others on the deck besides Hunston, he heard a low moan.

"Humph!" said Hunston, starting up. "I thought he was dead."

"Who's that?" asked Jack, thinking of poor Harvey.

"Fellow that came down with you," said Hunston grimly. "He landed on the boat. Look him over, Pete, I was just going to chuck him overboard."

The man addressed, a tall, raw-boned seaman, with a scar on his face, which showed grim and ghastly in the moonlight, rose and turned over the form of the man, who lay sprawled across the narrow deck of the little craft.

He leaped back with a cry of surprise.

"It's Pierson!" he exclaimed, "Andy Pierson!"

"What!" shouted Hunston, jumping to his feet so suddenly that he was almost thrown overboard by the motion of the boat. "What the devil was he doing on the bridge?"

He swung suddenly around on Jack.

"Is this any of your doing, kid?" he asked savagely. "Hang me if I don't believe you've got your old man's trick of [illegible]. Speak up, what do you know of this?"

"Nothing," said Jack sullenly. "I don't even know who the man is."

"Well, look at him then," growled Hunston, picking the boy up by his coat collar and throwing him across the deck to where the injured man lay, while a third member of Hunston's crew, a short, powerfully built man, with one eye, bent over the prostrate form.

Jack looked at the face and gave a cry of horror. It was that of the man who had pursued him from his uncle's house to the brink of the bridge!

"Seen him before, have you?" said Hunston, and then, turning to his crew: "Boys, this kid's the son of Jack Harkaway, the biggest wolf that ever chased an innocent little rabbit like me. Get that fellow out of his fit if you can, and maybe we'll find out what hand the young one had in getting them both chucked off the bridge. Meantime, take him below, and leave me to talk to the kid."

Jack looked at the man he had not seen since Hunston had stolen him and taken him across the ocean nearly ten years before.

Hunston, in turn, studied the boy.

"You're beginning to favor your old man," he said. "If he was alive, I'd cut you up and send him the pieces, just to get even with him."

Jack deemed it prudent to make no reply.

"But since he's dead, I can just as well kill you some other way and take fewer chances," continued Hunston.

"Whenever you're ready," said Jack.

"Nervy, too, hey?" Hunston grinned maliciously. "I'll soon take that out of you. Now, tell me how you and my co-worker in the [illegible] happened to cascade off that bridge at one and the same time."

"Sorry," said Jack, "but I can't."

Hunston leered at him.

"Often," said Jack.

"Well," proceeded his captor, "I'm going to fit this to your dainty little fingers and press the button, so to speak. You'll do the rest, I judge, in short order."

A cold chill crept down the boy's back, but he made no reply.

Hunston drew nearer. "Hold out your hand," he said.

Knowing how useless it would be to refuse, Jack obeyed, although not without a rush of blood to his heart.

"Will you tell me now what you know?" asked Hunston with an air of elaborate politeness.

"No, not now, or ever; you can kill me first!" shouted Jack.

The tears were in his eyes, but he never wavered an instant in his determination to protect his uncle's secret.

Suddenly a light shot across the deck.

"Hello, what's that?" said Hunston [illegible]

Jack looked in the direction from which the light seemed to come.

"It's the searchlight of a yacht," he said excitedly, and Hunston now having stepped back to obtain a better view of the gleam that fell across the boat's deck, he [illegible] and swim to [illegible]

"It's the police boat!" yelled Hunston. "They've seen us. Come below." He grabbed the boy around the waist and forced him through the hatch, closing it after him and making it secure from within.

"Duck!" he said briefly to a man in the conning tower.

There was a change in the steady sound of the machinery, a sickening feeling in Jack's breast and slowly but steadily the boat sank beneath the water and made her way under the surface of the East River.

The police boat, discovering that its quarry had escaped, guessed that she would keep on straight ahead, on the theory that the pursuers would expect her to double on her tracks, and guessed right.

As they came to the surface they found themselves directly under the pursuer's searchlight, and Hunston, the first to climb on the deck, looked almost directly into the muzzles of a couple of pistols of extremely modern and dangerous patterns.

Great was Jack's joy when he heard the [illegible] exclaim, "I give up."

The next minute the police boat was alongside and had lashed her hawser to the ringbolts in the deck of the whale-shaped vessel.

Almost at the same instant the injured man Pierson revived. Slowly opening his eyes they fell on Jack.

"I've got him," he exclaimed in delirium. "I've got the kid. The map's on him, Hunston! The map's on him!"

Hunston from the deck, heard the cry and darted down the ladder with the agility of a monkey.

While the policemen, whose tramping feet sounded like a thunderstorm overhead, were busy making sure that the lunger should not again drop out of sight, Hunston and his two assistants fell on the boy, and the former, with a shout of triumph, drew from his pocket the map.

"We'll fight 'em now boys," he said. "We'll never go to Sing Sing when we've got this map."

"Never, now!" muttered Hunston, and whipping a revolver from his pocket he opened fire at the hatchway. With a gasp the policeman fell forward, the weapon in his hand exploding and sending a bullet crashing through the brain of Pierson.

"Now," cried Hunston, "we'll fight for it, if he kills every one of us. It's millionaires or dead ducks, boys, take your choice."

The Death Trap

HAD the man Hunston been an ordinary criminal the fight would have been brief.

The officers of the police launch outnumbered the little party on the submarine three to one.

Pete, who was armed with a wicked six shooter, was posted to watch the hatch.

"Shoot the first man that opens it," said Hunston, "and shoot him early and often. I'm going forward on a little errand of my own. And you, Pete, keep both eyes on that boy. He's young, but he's a good sort to watch.

As the chief of the gang withdrew through the narrow hatch that led to the engine room Jack formed a plan of action of his own.

"Look behind you!"

The big sailor wheeled, and the boy, leaping through the air, caught the revolver from his relaxed grip, and thrust it into his face.

Schwarz swung round on him on the instant, but Jack had thrown his back against the iron wall, and was in a position to force both men to submission.

"Drop it," said Jack, in a voice that rang with excitement, "I don't want to kill anybody, but I will, and it'll be you, if you don't."

The pistol clattered to the grated floor.

Seeing that resistance would be useless, Schwarz untied the knots that bound Harvey, and the latter sprang to his feet and tore the gag from his mouth.

Pete and Schwarz exchanged glances, but the revolvers were convincing. Without a word they climbed up the ladder, and Jack and Harvey could hear the men on deck rush for them and overcome them. In a very few seconds they were dragged from the submarine to the deck of the police boat.

They did not have long to wait. Before they saw him they heard him cry out, excitedly.

"Get ready for a shock, boys. I've dropped a bomb aboard of her that will settle all hands, and we can take care of the few on deck."

Then his head appeared through the hatchway, and he found himself gazing down the muzzle of Harvey's six shooter.

He gave no sign of fear or chagrin. "It's your trick, gentlemen," he said, smiling politely; "but I've surely cleaned up half the harbor police squad before you got me."

Hunston's bomb had done its work.

The police launch, and all on board including the two accomplices of Hunston, had gone down or been blown to atoms, and the submarine was so bent and battered by the explosion that when Jack examined her he had grave doubts of ever being able to get her under way again.

But Jack Harkaway was not a boy to indulge in idle regrets when there was business on hand.

Making sure that Hunston was safe in Harvey's hands, Jack went forward into the compartment which had the gasoline motor by which the submarine was driven.

"Duck her," said Harvey, "and lie low, awhile."

"But we can't stay ducked," said Jack, remembering the earlier experience on the boat.

"It's our only chance," said Harvey, "unless you want to give up and tell our story."

Jack thought a minute.

"Why not carry the thing out and find the treasure now we're at it?" he said. "It'll be easier to explain everything satisfactorily if we're rich and influential."

Jack decided his course without hesitation. He would keep on until closely pursued, and then go to the bottom. It was not to be expected that any of the craft that might follow them would know the boat was a submarine, and they would be mystified and baffled when she sank.

So the little boat churned her way steadily forward. Looking back Jack saw searchlights swinging up and down the river and observed a pair of red and green lights low on the water—probably those of a swift motor boat not far behind.

They drew nearer and nearer.

Jack knew that his submarine was no match in speed for such a craft as this, and he signalled to Tony to slacken speed, warning him at the same time to make ready to send the boat to the bottom.

As the submarine lost her way in the swift current the other whisked up like a [illegible] she was almost alongside.

"Sink her!" he said to Tony. The boat stopped, shivered and began gradually to settle.

So near was the other boat that Jack could hear her pilot cry out with surprise and horror as he saw his quarry going down.

And then as the boat at last laid her deck level with the water, and the waves rolled over her, he suddenly became aware of a rushing sound, like water pouring over a dam.

"Great Scott," he shouted, "we forgot to close the forward hatch, and we'll be drowned like rats in a minute."

The submarine lunged forward with the weight of the water, and sank still more rapidly. From Tony came a scream like that of a frightened child, and Jack could hear Hunston cursing him for a murderer.

He strove to get out of the pilot house and rescue the others, but [illegible] foot had caught in the iron grating, and he was unable to move it.

The Escape of Hunston

IT was Tony, the engineer, who saved the ships' company from being drowned in the dangerous craft on which they had elected to make their journey to find Captain Kidd's treasure.

Jumping from the side of his engine, he scrambled up the ladder and attempted to stop the hatchway by swinging the door to.

But the weight of the water that cascaded against it was too great for his strength.

Half-drowned by the spray, he struggled with the door valiantly, throwing his entire strength against it again and again until his head swam and he almost fell back into the engine room from sheer weakness.

Jack had by this time managed to wrench loose his foot from the vise-like grating on the floor of the conning tower, and ran to Tony's assistance. Together they managed to force the hatch shut.

The hand pumps were immediately started, and the water was slowly cleared from the bilge. With this the boat slowly rose and was soon riding at her accustomed place in the water, with about three feet of her freeboard above the surface of the river.

"I need time to think and rest," thought Jack, and perceiving a quiet, secluded little bay near the point of Ward's Island

Jack stopped the machinery and ran the boat's nose into a mud bank which held her securely enough for the present.

Then, his first care being to relieve Harvey, he went below.

"It strikes me that when you ran away after the police boat was blown up, you brought a good bit of suspicion on yourself," said Hunston addressing Jack. "Fool trick, that."

"Keep still!" cried Harvey, angrily.

"Let him go on," said Jack, "and if he can help us out so much the better for him."

Hunston's eyes lit up with a cunning gleam.

"If I can get you out of this scot free," he asked, "am I in on the treasure?"

"What treasure?" said Jack.

"Oh, don't try to throw the harpoon into old man Hunston. What treasure, indeed! Look here, my son, I'm in a position to put you in Sing Sing, if, indeed, I can't send you to the electric chair. You're too young and beautiful for such a fate, you know, so you'd better take me in on the deal."

"Now, you just listen to [illegible] Hunston, and you'll find that treasure and buy diamonds with it."

"Tie him up," said Jack, and Harvey took the cords with which he himself had lately been bound and secured the protesting Hunston to the ringbolts in the side of the cabin.

Jack inspected the knots and was deaf to the old man's pleadings, which had now become piteous. Feeling confident that the prisoner was safe, he left Harvey on guard and went forward to sound out the engineer.

"Bada, bada, bada de luck," he groaned, as Jack approached him. "All goa to the dev'. Boata getta da smash, mena getta la kill; me an' you all getta da hang. I sorra I come. I come to runna da enj'. I no come to be da river pirate and da butch. Bada, bada, bada de bizz."

"Cheer up," said Jack, "you'll be going back to Sicily with a fortune yet. Did you ever see Hunston before you took this job?"

"Neva see him. No! he come my house. My frien' Pietro he tella I gooda runna da enj'. Hun he come and say,

"You runna da enj?"

"Yas, I say, I runna da enj' ver' fine. I learna him from da Italia warship."

"Dat gooda pay,' I tell him, an' I leava da wife and da babe, and come, and here I been. Bada, bada, bada bizz.'"

This was enough to satisfy Jack of the Sicilian's honesty, and, explaining to him in a few words Hunston's theft of the submarine and the subsequent events, Jack extracted from him a promise to stay with the boat until the project of searching for the treasure could be carried out.

It was his plan to find some cove along the sound where he could lie for the day without attracting attention, proceed under cover of the next night to find the treasure, which, judging by the map, ought easily to be discovered, and then return to New York, send the treasure to his uncle's house and give himself up to the police.

With a natural taste for machinery he was deeply interested in the mechanical contrivances by which the craft was driven and controlled, and spent fully an hour looking them carefully over and asking Tony questions concerning them.

When he at last returned for a council with Harvey it was bright daylight in the cabin. Jack started back in alarm as he entered the room.

With a sinking feeling at his heart, he recollected that he had in his excitement neglected to recover it from Hunston after the latter had obtained violent possession of it.

CHAPTER V.
The Fight on the Meadows

WHEN we left our young friend, Jack Harkaway, he had just discovered that his submarine boat was aground in a bay off Ward's Island, and that his enemy, Hunston, had escaped.

Jack had leaped from Brooklyn Bridge to be rescued by Hunston, and after an encounter with the police, in which the patrol boat was blown to atoms by Hunston's bomb, the latter was taken prisoner by Jack and his friend Harvey.

The craft was helpless, and the day was breaking.

To stay there with the boat was to make certain of being seen by passing craft or from the land and captured by the police, if, indeed, Hunston did not return and speedily effect their capture himself.

The two men inspected the little vessel. She stuck fast in the mud, but Jack, who had been eagerly watching the water, discovered that the tide was making.

"We've got a chance!" he exclaimed. "There'll be water enough to float her in an hour or two. If nothing happens we ought to be able to get out of here very shortly and sink her in some inlet till night."

"But Hunston will be back with help before that," said Harvey, looking about him uneasily.

The tide had now run in some distance, and the ripples were lapping the side of the boat gently.

The sound of oars had died away in the distance, and, although he was not sure that his enemies, if they were indeed in the boat, were not approaching him silently, he felt greatly relieved.

Jack discovered, with gratitude, that the engineer had a supply of crackers and canned fish in the locker, and he made a quick breakfast on these, taking care to take some with him for Harvey when he returned to the deck.

[illegible]

"He's got the drop on me, Jack," said Harvey in a low voice, "caught me off my guard. Back in the boat, quick, before he [illegible]."

But this was counsel which Jack had no thought of taking.

With more zeal than discretion, perhaps he sprang from the deck of the boat into the soft mud [illegible] directly for the [illegible]

He was right. Probably a worse marksman than the man who had attempted to capture the boat single handed could not have been found, for although he fired six shots, every one of them went wild and he was at last obliged to club his rifle to prevent Jack from springing on him and beating him to the ground.

To his astonishment, Jack discovered, on approaching the man, that he was hardly more than a [illegible] youngster of the kind that hang about the gas tanks and loaf about the water front.

Jack had no doubt that he had been sent by Hunston to keep the submarine from escaping until others of the gang could reach her, and he was prepared for an ambush behind him, but he nevertheless circled slowly around the fellow until he thought he had a good opening and then throwing himself suddenly on his stomach, slid through the mud and laid him swiftly by the heels.

The gun came down on his back, but it was a glancing blow, and Jack, leaping quickly to his feet, seized the weapon.

"I might hit you with this," he said, "but it would be cowardly."

"Look out, Jack!" yelled Harvey at the same instant. He spoke none too soon, for out of the fog came three more figures and with a yell started for the boy.

"Don't shoot. We don't want to kill anybody. Leave them to me."

He had not knocked around the world with his father for nothing, and all the tricks by which men whose only strength lay in sheer brute force could be taught wholesome lessons were at his command.

Stepping quickly to one side as they came, he allowed them to go down in a heap, from which he picked the topmost and handed him over to Harvey.

For a few minutes the three others [illegible] with each other, each thinking it was Jack he was pummelling. When they discovered the truth they jumped up quickly and again started for their common adversary, but this time Jack clubbed the gun and brought it down on the first head that came within range.

The other two now stood back.

"Go on yourself," said the other. "You go on and I'll follow."

But both of them stood immovable, and [illegible] Jack [illegible] Harvey down [illegible] they probably would have made no move at all.

This appearance of retreat, however, inspired [illegible]

Jack, hearing Harvey's yell of warning, turned just in time to seize the first man's outstretched fist and twist it until the fellow howled in pain.

His companion turned, tried to stop himself, but his momentum was too great and he [illegible] into Jack's [illegible]

[illegible] that they had had enough for so early in the [illegible] and Jack and Harvey were not further molested as they returned to the submarine.

The boat was now floating almost free, and a few turns of the propeller brought her off shore.

Just as Jack, who had gone into the con[illegible] what he believed to be in distress, he heard a sound of a gasoline launch coming down the stream, and a second later saw Hunston and six or seven men, each armed with a rifle, standing in the cockpit of a low, rakish motor boat, which shot out of the fog and came to a surprisingly sudden stop right across his bow.

But Jack had another plan.

As he approached the boat he spoke through the tube to Tony.

"Down with her, clear to the bottom."

The sinking apparatus worked admirably this time. Down went the boat, almost plunging to the bottom, and to the astonishment of the crew of the other boat she vanished directly beneath them, leaving only a churning circle of foam to mark the place of her departure.

"Now, Tony," commanded Jack, "full speed ahead," and the little boat shot along hardly three feet above the bottom of the [illegible] the air became so foul to be [illegible]

The boat was reeling off about ten knots and directly ahead of him was the morning boat from Fall River steaming under a slow [illegible] her way through the fog. It was too late to turn. The distance was too short for a plunge, and a collision of a kind that would crush the [illegible] when he might be saved would be nothing short of that.

After some discussion it was at length decided to run the boat down to North Brother Island and call in one of the doctors in the contagious disease hospital there.

In so extreme a case no one could refuse assistance, and, although embarrassing questions might be asked, Jack knew that it would be better if the boat were impounded on the spot than to allow the man to die.

A waterman who was waiting at the dock called a surgeon who came hurrying out of the mist, and, boarding the boat without a question, examined the man.

"He's pretty badly hurt," he said, "but an immediate operation might save him. How did it happen?"

"Get the man fixed up first," said Jack, quickly, "and we'll make explanations afterwards."

"All right," replied the physician, "but this thing must be explained, you know."

"It will be explained at the proper time," said Jack. "My name is Harkaway, and my address is in West Seventy-second street. My friend here is Dick Harvey, and will be produced when wanted. I should advise you to make a full and complete report of this to the police at once."

"Will you wait here until they come?" asked the doctor.

"It cannot be done," said Jack. "I have a very important errand on which I must use my boat. But I will come back as soon as I'm wanted and in any event promise to call here tomorrow morning. You know you can't lose a boat like this. Now will you [illegible] what can be done for our poor friend?"

The boy's straightforward manner impressed the medical man, and, summoning a couple of assistants who had followed him down to the wharf, he directed that the sufferer be taken to the hospital.

"And now," said Jack, "the quicker we get this mud turtle under water the better."

CHAPTER VI.
Pursuit and Capture

THROUGH the mist Jack could see the men and women on the deck of the great steamer, their faces white with terror and their limbs rigid.

At the first signal to reverse his engines Tony, with his usual quickness of [illegible] had thrown out the two fan-shaped [illegible] on either side of the [illegible]

In another minute the [illegible] had been brought back to their places, and the submarine was backing rapidly away.

"There are two things we must do at once," he said.

"What are they?" inquired Harvey, who had come to look upon the boy as the captain of the expedition, although Harvey was perhaps twenty years his senior.

"What!" exclaimed Harvey; "do you mean we must throw that fellow overboard as if he was the carcass of a horse?"

"I mean nothing of the kind," said Jack. "But you know that we can't go on any cruise after treasure with a dead man as passenger. What would we have to say if we were caught?"

"I think," said Harvey, "that the only thing to do is to take him along with us until we get this job done, and then turn him in when we give ourselves up, and have a general explanation."

"No," said Jack, "that will not do. The only thing I can think of is to make some kind of a coffin for him and bury him [illegible] until we return to-morrow morning. Then we can dig him up and bring him back with us."

Although Harvey regarded this plan as exceedingly dangerous he had no better to substitute for it, and Tony was set to work to construct from the floor boards of the engine room a temporary box, in which the dead man was to be decently bestowed.

"You're right, Harvey," he said, quietly. "This puts a different face on matters. He must be taken to some hospital immediately."

"Whatever it means, Harvey," said Jack "we must do it. I do not propose to murder anybody and to keep the poor [illegible]"

He scanned both banks closely, the fog now having been driven away by a brisk southeast wind, and presently detected a little cove inside the entrance of Flushing Bay.

In a few minutes she was under water to [illegible], but Tony and Harvey [illegible] out and into the dinghy.

Jack remained in the engine room.

"I'll stay here and keep shop to-day," he said, as the others took their departure. "Nobody will notice her here, and I can come up for air every now and then.

"You two fellows go ashore and keep off any attempts to investigate, and if Hunston or his gang heave in sight get into the dinghy and row back here for your lives."

Harvey and Tony lay on a grassy slope above the shore most of the day, munching the provisions that Tony had thoughtfully brought along, and continual

[illegible]

About 4 o'clock Jack was surprised when he brought the boat to the surface to hear a rapping on the deck.

A cold chill ran through him as he observed that it was not the signal agreed upon.

His first thought was to send the boat to the bottom again, but he knew that he soon must come to the surface, and that discovery then was certain.

[illegible]

Jack determined to find out once and for all what it meant, unslung the fastenings of the iron door and threw it open.

"I guess I've got you now, my lad," said the voice of Hunston in his ear.

The man stood in the bow of his speedy motor boat. Behind him was a pack of as hungry looking human wolves as it had ever been Jack's fortune to look upon.

The boy glanced into the boat to discover if his two companions had been captured. He could see nothing of them. Only the grinning face of Hunston and the black visages of his crowd looked down upon him from the boat.

This story will be continued in to-morrow's BOSTON AMERICAN.

TO THE BOY READERS OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN.

THE boys who read this story will notice that Jack Harkaway NEVER FOUGHT FOR THE LOVE of fighting. He fought when he had to, as all boys must, but in every day life the times when a boy has to fight are very, very infrequent.

Keep your wits about you—try to get the best education you can, stand up for your rights and the rights of those weaker than yourself, obey your parents and abide by the law, and you will be successful.

If you keep your temper always, and bear in mind that it takes more real manliness to leave cigarettes alone than to smoke them, you will find you have a better chance of being a good and useful citizen.

Keep out of trouble if you can, but if you get into it, get out without making making any more.

Keep your head clear. The best way to do it is to leave whiskey alone, and never allow your lungs to be fouled with cigarette smoke.

Haverhill, Mass., Aug. 19.—In the first game at Athletic Park this afternoon New Bedford landed on McGinley heavy and batted out seven runs, at the same time holding Haverhill down to six hits and not allowing them to score.

Pitcher Elliott asked to be allowed to win two games and he was sent in for the second, but the Haverhill players batted him hard for eighteen hits and seven runs. New Bedford was weak at the bat and scored only twice out of nine hits. Connolly received excellent support and the game was a walkover. The scores:

O'ROURKE PITCHES GREAT GAME FOR ST. JOHN.

Special to the Boston American.

BEVERLY, Aug. 19.—The St. John [illegible] aggregation of ball tossers from Peabody played and trounced the strong Beverly team on the Peabody Field diamond at Beverly this afternoon. Seldom has there been a larger crowd gathered at this place to witness a baseball game.

There were two star pitchers booked to cover the slabs, O'Rourke, a former twirler for the Holy Cross team, who did good work for them last season, and Leo Hafford, the star schoolboy twirler, formerly with the Somerville High team, but who has been playing with the Northern Vermont League this season.

This makes St. John's third game out of a series of seven to be played for the championship of Essex County. The score:

But There Are Gay Times in the Club House and Fireworks For the Entertainment of the Guests from the New York Yacht Club.

The annual regatta of the Eastern Yacht Club off Marblehead yesterday was more or less of a fizzle. There were no entries for races for the schooner and large sloop classes, and only two sets of smaller sloops, seven boats in all, competed for the prizes.

The regatta committee worked hard during the morning hours to arouse the sporting blood of the owners of large yachts, but without avail, and finally the committee went out on their tug to supervise the races for classes M and N.

There were quite a number of boats of the New York Yacht Club's fleet in the harbor, they having arrived during the night and early yesterday morning on their [illegible] from New York to Halifax. The skippers of the visiting yachts were tired and could not be induced to enter the Eastern Club's races. Thus a splendid programme was spoiled. Prizes were offered for five schooner classes and eight sloop classes, but, as said before, only two classes of small boats went out to the sport.

Club House Gay All Day.

However, if there wasn't much racing, the day was [illegible] for [illegible]. The club house [illegible] was filled all day. [illegible] yachtsmen were [illegible] night there was a fine display of fireworks from the rocks on the shore [illegible] club house.

The races were to [illegible] 11 o'clock, but were delayed [illegible] regatta committee made [illegible] efforts to drum up more entries. It was not until 12.20 that the first bunch of boats was sent away on the race of 10½ miles. This was the race for Class M, for which three boats, the Mona, the Chewink IV., and the New York boat, Mira, owned by C. L. Poor, crossed the line.

There was a good fresh breeze blowing from the east. The usual club triangular course was sailed. It was a reach to the first mark off Pigs Rock, a beat to the second mark and a broad reach to the finish off Marblehead Rock. The race for Class M [illegible] the Mona, who finished over four minutes ahead of her rivals. The New York boat was [illegible] beaten nearly a minute and a half corrected time by the Chewink IV.

New York Boat Wins.

In Class N a New York boat was successful, the Mimosa III., owned by T. L. Parke, winning easily from the Opitak III., the Dorel and the Carina II. The [illegible] and the start was at [illegible] five minutes later [illegible] other boats. The Mimosa III [illegible] over [illegible] the Opitak III [illegible] two sec[illegible].

On Sunday the New York Yacht Club fleet will remain in Marblehead harbor, and on Monday will start on the ocean race to Halifax.

KELLEY SAYS REDS WILL BE STRONG NEXT YEAR.

Joe Kelley thinks that his team will make a good bid for the pennant next season. He is already laying wires to get together one of the fastest clubs ever organized. All the old timber is to be sifted through and enough new ginger infused into the team to enable it to cope with the best teams in existence.

Of course, the Cambridge boy has given up hopes of landing the flag this season. Any rational manager would do the same, but "Kel" foresees how next season he can develop a team that will be second to none on the diamond.

"Kel" has agents scouting the minor league ranks for any new stock that are worthy a trial in fast company, and he hopes by this means to get almost an entirely new team, and one that will play ball from the word go. However, he isn't going to throw aside all his veterans, but is going to retain just enough of them to give the youngsters confidence when the supreme test comes.

"Kel" will retain some of the new players that he acquired this season, and he figures that by next season they will have gained just enough experience to make them play high class ball.

By Kelley's manoeuvres one may draw the conclusion there is absolutely no truth in the rumors that 1906 will see the Cincinnati club flying the American League banner. Kelley says that the clubs are bound by iron-clad contract and agreements, which prevent any such movement.

Moreover, Kelley says the fellows that put into circulation the report that he wouldn't manage the Reds next season were smoking bad dope.

Kelley believes the Champs have a good chance to win the American League pennant. He argues that they are of the veteran calibre that can stand the pace of this time of the year, while many of the other clubs are filled with the youngsters who will lose some of their nerve when the final struggle comes.

He deems Collins one of the greatest managers that ever trod a diamond, and a man capable of bringing his boys down the home stretch to the fore.

Kelley says that if Boston doesn't win the American League pennant, some other Eastern team will. He says the fact that the Eastern teams finish the season at home makes them almost pennant certainties with the race so close as it is now.

"Boston," says Kelley, "according to reports, has fine pitchers who are in championship form. Where is there another team that can boast any such condition? Moreover, Boston is hitting the ball some these days, which they didn't do earlier in the season. They have hit a winning streak, and from now on should be very much in the running.

"Cleveland, I think, has shot its bolt, and may be considered down for the count. Lajoie will come back into the game too late to do them any good.

"Philadelphia looks good, as does New York and Boston, and it's between these three teams for the final honors.

"In our own league, New York has the pennant won in a walk, unless some unforeseen accident robs them of it."

Yesterday he posted $100 with the BOSTON AMERICAN for a fight with Joe Gans and the latter can name his own terms and meet him either in Boston or Baltimore, or before any big club in the country.

Mike had his forfeit money posted at Baltimore before Gans and his manager, Al. Herford, left for Frisco, but the latter claimed Gans's hand was injured then.

Now it is up to Herford to recognize the Hub boxer who will not rest till he has driven Gans to meet him or make him retire from the ring.

Mike Twin has met the best men in the country in the lightweight division and never was defeated. Such men as Jimmy Gardner, Jack Blackburn, Willie Fitzgerald, George McFadden have been beaten.

Sullivan says that if Gans refuses to meet him [illegible] he will post $1,000 to meet Jimmy Britt or Jimmy Gardner at the lightweight limit.

YACHTSMEN ON DIAMOND.

Dodo Yacht Club of Cambridge was the victor in an interesting baseball game with the Tremont Temple Athletic Association on Cambridge Common yesterday afternoon, score 12 to 11. Brundage and Dickerman, battery for the Dodo Yacht Club, won their game over Richardson and Hanlon, who were in the points for Tremont Temple.

Riot Almost Mars Game Betweeen Roslindales and Institutes at Locust St. Grounds. Latter Won by Fluke in Tenth

On the Locust street ball grounds yesterday afternoon, before the largest crowd of baseball fans ever assembled in the history of the park, Roslindale went down to defeat at the hands of the Institutes of East Cambridge, after one of the most bitterly fought and at the same time brilliant baseball contests ever witnessed in South Boston. Both teams were in the pink of condition, and aroused to the highest pitch by their followers, who were evenly divided and comprised fully 1,200 of the [illegible] present.

The game yesterday was the third of a series between the two teams, the first resulting in a victory for Roslindale on their home grounds, 13 to 12, the second game played two weeks ago on the National League grounds also ending in victory for Roslindale, after a hard [illegible] being 4 to 3 at the final gong. DEDHAM POLOISTS DEFEAT STRONG MYOPIAS.

Good, Clean Playing Characterized Game, Only One Player Being Penalized for a Foul. Allan Forbes Star of the Day

Myopia Hunt Club, Myopia, Aug. 19.—Society people gathered in large numbers at the Myopia Hunt Club grounds at Hamilton this afternoon to witness the game between the favorite Dedham polo players and the Myopia team, the former taking the game by a score of 4¾ to 1.

The day was an ideal one for the game, which was full of exciting plays, very interesting to those on the side lines, which, by the way, included all the prominent smart set members from along the North Shore. Good, clean playing characterized the game, only one of the players being penalized, George Wright of the Dedham team being called for a foul in the second period, this being a cross stroke.

Allan Forbes of the visiting team was easily the star of [illegible] making three of the goals for his [illegible] and keeping the opponent players [illegible].

Following the main event a mixed team of Dedham and Myopia players calling themselves the Reds and the Yellows played, the latter team walking off with the honors by the score of 10 to [illegible], amid the applause of the spectators.

Coaching parties were numerous and a long line of automobiles filled the driveway on both sides of the field.

Among the prominent people in attendance were Mrs. [illegible] Swift and daughter, Mrs. Clark Moore of Beverly Farms, Gordon Dexter and his sister, Dr. Franklin Dexter, of Beverly Farms, R. T. M. Kean of Magnolia, Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Allen of Beverly Cove, and Mr. James Parker of Beverly Cove.

CHAMPION'S RECORD ALMOST EQUALLED BY FRED C. HOLT

Hub Rider at Motor Cyclists' Championship Races, Held at Charles River Park Yesterday, Makes Mile in 56 4-5s.

[illegible] sensational, nerve-racking races [illegible] at the Charles River Park yesterday afternoon, where the American Federation of Motorcyclists held their annual championship races. The six races on the card were supplemented by three exhibitions after the world's record held by Albert Champion, at 55 4-5s. Fred C. Holt's effort was the most successful, as he negotiated the mile in 56 2-5s., just a shade off.

This was a most remarkable performance, as the wind was blowing across the track [illegible] the starter gave him just a little the worst of it at the pistol shot. He made his time on an Indian machine of 1 3/4 h. p. and only escaped [illegible] Champion's mark, although a large crowd of enthusiasts were anxious for Holt to try his luck again. [illegible] the races were profoundly interesting. Each one of the events was [illegible] and the competitors [illegible] as though a big fortune were at stake on the result.

Fans Started Early to Track.

[illegible] the start of the races, the fans started to pour into the park. Everyone in the cycling world and on its borders [illegible] with speedomania was in attendance. The chug-chug of the motors as they whirled around the saucer-shaped track kept everyone on edge and nobody left the resort until the last event had been decided.

Bob Shields, the old-time track bike rider, who had his collarbone broken at Charles River some nine years ago, was at the track in the garb of a ticket-taker and gab artist. His partner performed some difficult stunts on the grass, while he passed the hat around and induced the fans to part with their loose change. He, with his foghorn voice and his irresistible humor, made a tremendous hit.

There were a couple of flukes to mar an otherwise brilliant programme. The starter, who didn't seem to know his business, gave the pistol crack a lap too soon in the one-mile race, flying start. After a long argument, it was decided not to run the event over again.

Fluke in One-Mile Champ. Race

The one-mile national championship race was run off with a flying start, but after several events were decided it was discovered the event should have been given a standing start, so it was re-raced. This made a change in the winner.

There wasn't an accident to mar the programme, and this in itself was remarkable as in one race there were as many as seven starters.

Stanley T. Kellog had an easy time in the first heat of the one-half mile race, flying start. Jake Derosier won the second heat and also was first in the final in 38 4-5s.

The five-mile national championship race was a well contested affair, and F. C. Hoyt of Boston captured the honors.

Wyatt Won First Heat.

R. Wyatt of Brockton won the first heat of the one-mile race, with flying start. Charles A. Libbey of Lynn won the second spasm. Charles Libbey won the final heat, although only four heats were run, owing to the miscount of the starter. There was room for protest, as when the starter discharged his pistol Libbey slowed up and was passed by Derosier before the full mile was completed. However, the judges decided to let the men stand in the order they were at the end of the fourth lap.

In the first send-off of the riders in the one-mile championship, Jake Derosier won, but as the race was run with a flying start, instead of a standing, the men were obliged to ride it again. This time F. C. Hoyt succeeded in capturing the honors through a head start.

Derosier Won Ten-Mile Race.

In the ten-mile race, which was held with a flying start, Jake Derosier won by about three lengths. At some stages of the race, the competition was keen, but Derosier so far outclassed his field that the result was never in doubt.

Derosier and Bob Shultz made unsuccessful attempts to break the world's record, but left it to Hoyt to put Champion's mark in danger.

F. S. Hoyt also won the two mile championship with ease.

Summary.

One-half mile, flying start—First heat, won by Stanley T. Kellogg, Bridgeport, time, 39 1-5s. Second heat won by J. Derosier, Springfield, time, 37 2-5s. Final heat won by J. Derosier, Ralph Wyatt, Brockton, second, time, 38 4-5s.

Five-mile national championship—Won by Fred C. Hoyt, J. Derosier, Springfield, second. Time, 6m. 12 2-5s.

One mile, flying start—First heat, won by R. Wyatt, Brockton, time, 1m. 22s. Second heat, won by Charles A. Libbey, Lynn, time, 1m. 10 1-5s. Final heat, won by Charles A. Libbey, time, 1m. 17 4-5s. (Only four laps were run owing to starter's mistake.)

One-mile national championship—Won by F. C. Hoyt, J. Derosier, second, time, 1m. 10 1-5s.

Ten mile, flying start—Won by J. Derosier, Springfield, Guy Green, second, time, 12m. 48s.

One-mile exhibition—J. Derosier, time, 59 3-5s.

One-mile exhibition—Bob Schultz, time, 1m. 8 1-5s.

One-mile exhibition—F. C. Hoyt, time, 56 2-5s.

Two-mile national championship—Won by F. S. Hoyt; S. T. Kellogg, second, time, 2m. 10 1-5s.

GLADYS M. MADE FAST TIME ON SPEEDWAY.

The Little Mare Is Sent a Trial to Beat 32 Seconds and Does It Successfully. Mattie Nully Is a Winner

Franklin Field speedway races drew a large crowd yesterday afternoon, and it lined the fences from Talbot avenue to the Sheepfold. After the horses had raced in their different classes to fighting finishes in every heat, and had scored 32 seconds, R. K. Clarke was requested to start Gladys M against the best mark of the day. The little mare had been worked out and was in condition to give John M or The Friend a race for any part of a mile.

Taking the word on a well-planned flying start, she kept in the middle of the track with perfect alignment and with a frictionless stride passed under the wire in .31¼. Mr. Clark will attempt to beat 30 seconds four times in one afternoon later on.

The race between Max G. and India Panis was a disappointment. Max G. can step a quarter in 31 seconds on the track and yesterday went from wire to wire in 33 seconds with India Panis right at his throat latch in the first heat. In the other heats the little trotter was unsteady and his driver could not keep him on his gait.

In the Old Colony class for trotters Mattie Milly worked with the precision of a piston rod and vanquished her two rivals in straight heats. H. P. G. made a break in the last heat in an attempt to get first place. He is a gamey trotter and is "a coming." The summaries:

AUDOBON BOY IS READY TO RACE

J. Y. Gatcomb walked into the stakeholder's office yesterday afternoon and made the final deposit of $4,000 for Audobon Boy in the great match pacing race between his horse, the mare Ecstatic, and the mare Belle Mac. The stakes are $15,000.

Gatcomb says his horse is in the best condition possible for a horse to race at top speed and he not only expects to win this race, but also to defeat Dan Patch if they come together. He believes Audobon Boy to be the fastest pacer in the world and has believed this for three years or more.

JOHN SHEPARD KING OF BOSTON SPEEDWAYS FOR FIFTY YEARS

King of Boston's speedways and road drivers for fifty years, is the proud record and title of John Shepard, millionaire merchant and clubman, who has driven trotters and been foremost in light harness sports for over half a century.

Before he was twenty-one years of age he was in business, alone, on Hanover street, and prospering. It was at that early age that he bought a horse for $300, and in a little while sold it for a thousand. His horses were sources of profit then. Driving on the Milldam, Neck, Punch Bowl and Brighton roads was very popular in those days and a mighty jolly lot of men enjoyed the sport.

From driving a single animal the rage ran to pairs and even to four-in-hands. About the first pair of note which Mr. Shepard owned were Sam Allen and Joe Clark. Sam Allen had run away with the first maker of horse boots, Sam Stowell, and killed him, before he became a mate to Joe Clark. They were a handsome, slashing pair of bays and could beat anything on the road. A great rivalry among road drivers began and Mr. Shepard shifted horses often. Goldfinder, a handsome Lambert stallion became the mate of Joe Clark, who proved too slow for the Morgan horse and Blondine, a pretty mare by George Wilkes, made up the pair. They were stylish chestnuts in color and very attractive.

The Wilkes mare proved the faster of the pair and Mill Boy, a son of Jay Gould was purchased of George Scattergood of Philadelphia, the price being $8,500.

Won on Grand Circuit.

About this time he owned Della Magee and Robert Lee, which were very fast to pole, then he had Captain and Earnest Maltravers, which he sold to the late J. B. Barnaby of Providence. He bought Uncle Abe, a son of Winthrop Morrill, of John May, paying $5,000 [illegible] roadsters. He went over to one of the first Grand Circuit meetings at Buffalo and won a race over a field of nine horses [illegible] This was fast time for those years. Budd Doble, the noted trainer, afterwards had this horse.

All the wealthy horsemen and road drivers were ambitious to own a fast pair. The team record at that time was held by Jessie Wales and Darkness, 2.26¾, owned by the late fire commissioner of Boston, Colonel Henry S. Russell. In 1877 the late Commodore Vanderbilt drove the outlaw gelding, Small Hopes, and Lady Mac a mile over the Fleetwood track in [illegible] New York [illegible] 1881 Mr. Shepard [illegible] Mill Boy over the Beacon Park, Brighton, a mile in 2.22.

Four days later, Frank Work of New York, a very wealthy horseman, drove Edward and Dick Swiveler over Fleetwood Park, N. Y., in 2.16¼. It is a little singular, but Mr. Shepard had owned Swiveler and sold him to Mr. Work.

The late James Golden had been called into Mr. Shepard's confidence and he was sent to California to purchase Arab as a mate to Mill Boy, which he did, the purchase price being $15,000. Mr. Shepard was after a team to beat the world.

De Barry 2.19¼, was added to his stable and about this time he secured the fast trotting stallion Young Rolfe 2.21¼, which was the sire of the Northern King Nelson 2.09.

When Golden arrived home in April from California with Arab they hitched him with Mill Boy and they turned Mystic track in 2.19.

Again a change was made and the beautiful, fast mare Reina 2.12¾, was bought to go with Arab.

Two Bets Pensioned.

By this time [illegible] the Shepard stables were very thick. The breeding craze had had a pretty stiff trial and the stock [illegible] great quality, speed. An auction flag went up one day in front of the Shepard stable, on Beacon street and they all went for the "high dollar." Mill Boy and Arab were pensioned. Regretting the sale of Reina, she was purchased back and is now a change mate for either Altro L. or Promise.

After Mr. Shepard had repented of giving up road driving for recreation he purchased Senator L., 2.08¾, a splendid looking trotter, and borrowing from his old friend J. W. Lawson Boralma, 2.08, drove them a mile over Readville in 2.12¼. This [illegible] Mr. Shepard [illegible] he is trying to negotiate for a pair which will shade the record of the Billings pair.

Mr. Shepard stands straight and his nerve and eye are as strong and magical as years ago when his shout was first heard as the boys went out for an afternoon drive. He is a member of the Country, Metropolitan and Gentlemen's Driving Clubs, a member of the Boston Horse Show Association, and is a leader in Boston's coaching parades, with a dashing coach and four.

Favorites in Front at Dover Harness Races

Special to the Boston American.

Dover, N. H., Aug. 19.—There were four excellent races on the card at Granite State Park to-day. The unfinished 2.15 pace left over from yesterday, was won by Caffeino, the favorite, in a hard fought contest. The free-for-all trot was won by Wentworth, the favorite, in easy drives. Advancer was the favorite in the 2.20 trot, and he carried the money safely, after dropping the first heat to May Zetta. Starlight, the favorite in the 2.18 pace, won after dropping the first heat to Dr. Baird. Summaries:

LEOMINSTER, 10; FITCHBURG, 1.

Leominster, Aug. 19.—Leominster defeated Fitchburg to-day, 10 to 1. A homer by Minton saved Fitchburg from a shut out. Klebedanz, Wilder and Connaughton did great work. In the ninth Chapman was caught out at first and he was so mad that he grabbed the ball and threw it across the field into the crowd. The score:

CAUGHNAWAGA IN A DRIVE WINS THE RICH CUP AT SARATOGA

Special to the Sunday American.

Saratoga, Aug. 19.—The Saratoga Cup [illegible] at one mile and [illegible] one of the [illegible] features of the [illegible] went to Caughnawaga to-day after a glorious race.

Never did the Sanfords score a more worthy victory, and great was the elation [illegible] of their carpet-weaving employees who [illegible] all the way from the Mohawk Valley to see the cup run and to [illegible] the six-year-old son of Clifford [illegible] Sanford representative [illegible] a drive in front of August Belmont's [illegible] the outside [illegible] Sydney Paget's [illegible] second choice and the [illegible] starter, was a poor third. The [illegible] the distance was slow.

The disappointment of the race was the absence of H. P. Whitney's Artful. Though the track management advertised the fact that she would surely start in the face of an announcement to the contrary on the part of John W. Rodgers, her trainer, she was withdrawn at the eleventh hour, after thousands of persons had been drawn to the track expressly to see the great daughter of Hamburg perform under silks.

Only Three Starters.

For the first time in the history of the Saratoga cup but three horses went to the post. Cairngorm was much the best horse and should have won, but for a shockingly bad ride put up by Martin, which occasioned no end of talk. Cairngorm and Beldame raced in front head and head after the first half mile to the top of the stretch with Caughnawaga in behind the early pace.

Once rounding for home Beldame and Cairngorm wavered. Redfern came strong with the Sanford horse and catching the [illegible] won rather handily by a length from Beldame, who was just the same distance in front of Cairngorm, the latter being eased off in the final sixteenth [illegible] was [illegible] off in the early run.

"Killing" on Brush Up.

A 40 to 1 shot was put over here this afternoon and a bundle of money taken from the books by the Haymans and their friends in the opening race. The medium of the clean up was Brush-up. He won nicely from Homo, the favorite, with Water Mirror, backed from 30 to 1 to 8 to 1, third.

The Beverwick steeplechase handicap over the full course resulted in a farce. [illegible] the 7 to [illegible] favorite, ran out [illegible] under his load of 164 [illegible] who is now [illegible] rolling a 12 to 5 [illegible] under 141 pounds. Bonny Lane, at 8 to 5, escaped harm, and [illegible] a winner after the first [illegible] bobbled [illegible] in second place. Jim Newman pulled up.

The United States Hotel stakes of $10,000, at three-quarters of a mile, showed the superb class and style of H. P. Whitney's star two-year-old Burgomaster. Along with Pegasus, he ruled as the Whitney entry at 4 to 5. Hildebrand being on the suspended list, Redfern rode Burgomaster. The colt won like the juvenile premier of the year. He broke off in front and was never headed again, winning all the way in a gentle gallop. He had a [illegible] Pegasus at the end, who was [illegible] to stall off Ormondale, as [illegible]

The fifth race, at a mile, for three-year olds [illegible] went to Knight of Rhodes, at 12 to 5. He won in a [illegible] from King Rose at 7 to 1, with J. E. Seagram's Irish Witch third. Irish Witch made the running in front to the head of the stretch, where Knight of Rhodes came through on the rail and got up in time to win at the end by a head from King Rose, who just did close [illegible] Irish Witch.

THE WINNERS.

FIRST RACE—Selling [illegible] furlongs. Brush Up, 98 (Perrine), 40 to 1 and 12 to 1, won; Homo, 108 (M. Daniel), 7 to 2 and 6 to 5, second; Water Mirror, 98 [illegible] 15 to 1 and [illegible] third. Time—1.1[illegible] Dainesse, Raibert, Pioneer, Colonel White, Lochinvar, Regal and Peggy O'Neal also ran.

SECOND RACE—The Beverwick steeplechase [illegible] three-year-olds and up [illegible] and one-half miles. Bonny Lane [illegible] 13 to 10 and out, won; Mc[illegible] Bedrock, 7 to 2 and even, second; [illegible] 1 2 Rash, 3 to 2 and out, third. Three started.

THIRD RACE—The United States Hotel stakes; two-year-olds; [illegible] furlongs. Burgomaster, 127 (Redfern), 3 to 5 and 1 to 4, won; Pegasus, 112 (Lyne), 3 to 5 and 1 to 4, second; Ormondale, 112 (Burns), 7 to 2 and even, third. Time—1.1[illegible] Bellsnicker, Oyama, McKittredge and Samson also ran.

FOURTH RACE—The Saratoga cup; three-year-olds and up; one mile and six furlongs. Caughnawaga, 127 (Redfern), 6 to 5 and 1 to 4, won; Beldame, 121 (O'Neil), 18 to 5 and 4 to 5 [illegible] Cairngorm [illegible]

FIFTH RACE—[illegible] Knight of Rhodes [illegible] King Rose [illegible] Irish Witch [illegible] Time—1.4[illegible] The Cure also ran.

SIXTH RACE—For two-year-olds [illegible] Yalagal, 110 (W. Buchanan), 40 to 1 [illegible] won; Flip-flap, 110 (W. Knapp), 13 to 5 [illegible] second; Bridgeman, 117 [illegible] third. Time [illegible] Running Water, Comfort [illegible] also ran.

ARAWAK DEFEATS RIVAL, AREYTO

Wellfleet, Mass., Aug. 19.—The fourth in a series of championship races of the Wellfleet Yacht Club was sailed in the bay off Chequesset Inn to-day in a heavy east wind and was watched by a large crowd of Summer guests.

Before the race the owners of Areyto and Arawak agreed to sail over a three-mile course and change crews second time around. The greatest rivalry exists between the owners. Arawak got four minutes' handicap on sailing allowance and won with the owner at the helm by six minutes seventeen seconds, and with Areyto's owner by twenty three seconds.

Miss Gormley of Provincetown sailed the Peggie II, an eighteen foot knockabout which was disabled by the twisting off of the rudder head. The distance was six miles over a triangular course of run, beat and reach. In the second class Flirt, John Holbrook, Jr., defeated Gillian, William Gill, by three minutes.

GAMES YESTERDAY.

At Brooklyn—Brooklyn 3, Pittsburg 2.
At Boston—Boston 5, Cincinnati 1.
At Philadelphia—Philadelphia 7, St. Louis 2.

Chick Fraser was responsible for the downfall of Joe Kelley's Redlegs in the last games of the series at the South End grounds yesterday when the Westerners in their last appearance of the year on Hub soil were plastered with a drubbing at the rate of 5 to 1.

That they scored at all was due to the munificence of the selfsame Chick as it was a wild throw by the pitcher into the bleachers that allowed the only tally by the Reds.

It was a dismal disappointment for the Cambridge boy, Joe Kelley, who wanted to show his friends in the East that he had a team several notches better than that which represented Beantown, but Joe has got a better opinion of our nine as the best he could get was two out of the four games here when he figured on taking the majority.

Ideal Day for Game.

It was an ideal day for some nice diamond entertainment and the fans were not slow to take advantage of the fine conditions that prevailed to see what the Tenneyites were capable of doing, and the first-base bleachers were filled to overflowing when the bell rang for the opening.

After the first inning it was evident that Fraser held the game in his palm as he had all of [illegible] box craft besides a bunch of speed which he used when necessary. He was not satisfied to hold the Red batters down to four scattered bingles, but when it came his turn to thump the sphere he was right there, and one of the longest hits of the day was credited to him, and his swats developed two of the five runs.

Overall Didnt Fit.

Big Overall, the California importation who President Hermann considers the pet of his pitching staff, looked large enough to mow the Tenneyites down, but he failed to scare them in the least as the hits came at the rigt time and he never had a chance with Fraser, who kept the Reds going out in order.

The home batery did some substantial stick work and Paddy Moran, as usual, did his share. His timely single in the second when two were down, which brought in two runs, was the real candy and made Pat solid with the fans.

Batty and Cannell were the only two players outside the battery who could fathom Overall, and they had three hits apiece chalked up for them.

Cannell's were [illegible] kind, but he got by on them and by getting on base was able to build up the score.

Sharp fielding [illegible] Fraser held the Reds in check [illegible] strike out but [illegible] his position was a revelation [illegible] in front of hard hit shots and covered the base to perfection.

Fraser's Eagle Eyes.

He also had the [illegible] up a tree as he watched the [illegible] that he nailed one that caused the others to hold tight.

There were only nine Reds to get to base and after the first inning only two got as far as second base.

The Reds [illegible] run in [illegible] first inning which [illegible] Huggins was too diminutive for Fraser to locate him and the pigmy second sacker got free transportation to the initial bag. Chick saw the midget playing off the bag and heaved the sphere over to Tenney but the throw was [illegible] as the ball bounded into the bleachers and according to the ruling of President Pulliam, the runner was allowed to make the circuit unmolested.

Batty slipped up on an easy looking bounder off Barry, but when the latter tried to steal he was nailed easily at second. Kelley and Seymour were easy victims on ground shots to Batty and Tenney.

Batty Starts Things.

Batty started things with a boom by banging the ball a foot below the top of the left fence. Joe Kelley, who was watching the ball in its flight in left garden, thought sure it was going over, and was surprised when it came down in front of him on the rebound from the tip of the barrier. Tenney made a good effort, his long fly going to Seymour. Dolan's fly to centre looked safe and Batty started for second. Cy Seymour put on steam, grabbed the [illegible] and [illegible] it to Barry to double up Batty. [illegible] Barry's way on purpose and [illegible] declared Batty out for Dolan's interference.

The Reds had a chance to score in the second, but were nipped by a shifty double play. Tommy Corcoran hit to far centre, Rip Cannell getting one hand on the ball as it sailed over his head. Steinfeldt drove a low one at Wolverton that looked like a [illegible] started for third [illegible] doubled at second. Odwell singled, but Schlei was the third out.

The locals got a move on in the second session at the bat in which the battery figured. Del. drew a base, but was forced by Wolverton, but a wild throw to Barry trying to make a double out of it, and Wolverton got to second. Cannell took his time and was rewarded with a pass. Both runners moved up a notch on a wild pitch.

Moran's Timely Single.

Raymer fanned and the outlook was bad with two down, [illegible] Pat Moran was on deck with a smashing single against the [illegible] Wolverton and Cannell [illegible] Fraser not to be outdone by the brilliancy of his battery mate, swung viciously and clouted one to the left corner of the ground that gave Joe Kelley a chase and netted two bags. He was left standing as Batty died on a roller.

Fred Odwell spoiled the chances to score in the fourth when he nabbed Raymer's low fly close to the ground. Cannell had got a scratch hit past Steinfeldt and was down to second and easily doubled, so impossible did the catch look when it started from the bat.

The Reds had a good opportunity to make a killing in the fifth inning, when Odwell got his base and Schlei came up with a ball back of third that Del made a great stab for, but it belonged to Wolverton, and he missed it. Overall tried to bunt and sent up a dwarf foul for Moran. Odwell got too frisky over second bag and Fraser caught him, while Batty blocked him off the bag.

Fun for the Locals.

There was some fun in Boston's half of the fifth when Moran singled, getting a sizzling grounder by Steinfeldt. Batty connected safe, as Overall only got one hand on his grasser, and Tenney raised a howl by bunting and filling the bases. Dolan could not give any and went out on strikes. Delehanty worked a pass, thereby getting Moran in with the run. Wolverton sent a fly to Seymour.

Some good luck started a run for the Tenneyites in the sixth when Cannell got his second single and when Raymer hit to Corcoran, who promptly threw to Huggins for the force out. Little Huggins dropped the ball. Moran surprisingly struck out, but Fraser smashed to left, scoring Cannell. Raymer was caught on the play while making for third, as Overall stopped Kelley's throw to the plate and headed Raymer off by tossing to Corcoran, who was covering third. Raymer made a dash back for second, but Huggins had the ball ahead of him. Batty laid on the ball for a double over Seymour's head and Fraser was slow on the bases, only getting as far as third. Tenney closed the inning by a fly to Seymour. The score.

PHILADELPHIA 7, ST. LOUIS 2

Philadelphia, Aug 19.—The Phillies defeated St. Louis here this afternoon by the score of 7 to 2 in an almost featureless contest. Both Sparks and McFarland were hit hard but the Quaker box artist proved to be the steadier and his team backed him up better than the St. Louis band did their twirler.

The only play worthy of mention was a rattling double play by Bransfield unassisted in the seventh inning, when with Dunleavy on first he nailed Shannon's line smash and beat Dunleavy back to the bag.

Beckley continued to allow low throws by the basemen to bounce out of his mit, though he made several good efforts to hold wild throws to cut down batsmen. Score:

USEFUL EXERCISE ENABLES THE BODY TO RESIST GRAVITATION

Julian Hawthorne's Second Article on Physical Development.

By Julian Hawthorne.

YOU have been reminded of the four trustworthy and inexpensive physicians—our arms and our legs—which all of us carry about with us, and of the good results which reasonable attention to their suggestions will produce in us. I also remarked that what we want is not professional athletics in our community, but a community of amateur athletes. Professional athletics are well enough in their way, but their use should be restricted to maintaining standards of athletic proficiency, and to stimulating a healthy, practical interest in athletics among amateurs. They become objectionable when amateurs attend their exhibitions instead of doing work themselves, and when anything remotely approaching professionalism is permitted to taint amateur athletics. I shall have occasion hereafter to dwell upon this point with emphasis; but for the present there are several things to be said upon the subject of the value and significance, in civilization, of athletics in general.

Value of Athletics Recognized.

Our universities seem to recognize their educational value; and yet there is ground for suspecting that their encouragement by these institutions is in no small degree due to a desire to attract students, and thus make a good financial showing. With the same end in view, college teams—the football elevens, the baseball nines, the rowing eights, and the track athletes—are permitted to collect large sums of money, which are spent upon training and paraphernalia, upon traveling and hotel bills, upon the rent of grounds, and upon the salaries of professional trainers. The object of all this is to carry on and stimulate competitions between the universities. The university which stands at the head of the list in these competitions this year will be apt to have the largest list of applications for matriculation at the opening of the next term. In other words, athletics are encouraged not purely for their own intrinsic sake, but also for revenue; and that aim, if it does not actually open the way for the introduction into college athletics of professionals, does tend to make the college amateurs take a professional view of athletics.

It also promotes the habit of betting money upon events; which is a bad habit, because the money which college men bet was not earned by them, and it is bad enough to gamble even with what is your own; because it leads to regarding athletics as a means of income, which is what professionals do; and because it brings college men into contact of an objectionable kind with persons who are not college men, and who are likely to be very undesirable as associates. So that, upon the whole, it may be doubted whether the influence of university competitions upon amateur athletics is beneficial. And if our universities do not set a good example in this respect, where shall we look for one?

There will be abundant practical illustrations of what I am now mentioning in the future, upon which I shall comment frankly; but I allude to them now only for the purpose of introducing the statement that we are in danger of vulgarizing the whole athletic field. The ancient Greeks, and the Romans in their prime, did not hold this attitude, nor do the Japanese to-day; they regarded athletics as one of the finest and most serious fruits of culture. And we must take a somewhat similar view of them, unless we are prepared to see them degenerate into something which decent folks would be shy of having anything to do with. Every man and woman of us ought to have the complete and free use of every muscle in the body; not only because such use is in itself proper and enjoyable, but because those whose bodies are not the full and prompt instruments of the mind are positively hampered and restricted in their mental development.

Danger of Overtraining.

But, on the other hand, the development of the muscular system beyond what is needed for robust health and general physical efficiency is something worse than waste of time and energy; it defeats its own ostensible object; since, although the person training himself to become a crack runner, oarsman, pugilist, "strong man," or what not, may succeed in his ambition, he will do so at the cost of his health and stamina. Instead of lengthening his life, he shortens it; and in proportion as the feats he performs are extraordinary, the years during which he is able to perform any feats at all are curtailed.

All muscular exertion acts directly upon the heart and lungs, and through them upon the other organs of the body; and up to a certain point this action is beneficial. But as soon as that point (for any individual) is passed, the vital resources of the body begin to fail; the overgrown muscles sap the power of the heart and overtax the lungs; digestion is impeded, the kidneys and bowels are weakened, the nerves become diseased, and finally the muscles themselves, for which all this sacrifice has been made, lose their vigor and waste away. Of course, if a man is to make his livelihood by his muscles, he may be justified in thus exhausting his youth for the sake of earning a support for his age; but for the ordinary citizen such a course is indefensible. And it is also to be remarked that the athlete who finds his stamina deserting him is prone to try to restore it by artificial stimulants, the transient good effect of which becomes more transient with each repetition, while the bad effects are cumulative and irrevocable. Right exercise should abolish the craving for stimulants; and exercise that creates such a craving is thereby convicted of being excessive, and consequently injurious.

Gravitation an Elemental Force.

I touch on these points in passing, to return to them upon occasion as we proceed. Meanwhile let me put in a sentence, the fundamental purpose of all useful exercise—it is, to enable the body to resist gravitation. Gravitation is an elemental force, which you may figure to yourself as an enemy—though rightly dealt with it is a friend—whose aim is to drag down all things toward the centre of the earth. In our childhood and youth its effect upon our bodies is not apparent; but observe any very old person, and you will notice that the drag downward has become conspicuous in all the physical lines and contours. The head is bent, the shoulders droop, the back is bowed, the cheeks hang down; the furrows in the face are as if made by down-dragging claws. The chest sinks toward the abdomen, the abdomen is pendent, the knees betray the heaviness of what we call age. It is the force of gravitation, acting upon the body without intermission through many years, that has done this. Down, down must the old man go, until the very earth opens beneath him, and he vanishes forever!

Exercise Resists the Drag.

Exercise resists this drag, and in so doing gives strength and health to the body. It counteracts that deadly pull, it hardens the muscles, it preserves their contours, it maintains the smooth and rounded forms of youth. Its tendency is to lift, to make buoyant, and by thus opposing to the power of gravitation the equally persistent power of the human will, to transform disaster and decay into vigor and life. But for gravitation, we should not grow old; but were it not for gravitation, stimulating resistance to it, we could never beome strong. And so does gravitation, which, if we yield to it, becomes our enemy, appear as our potent friend if we resolutely fight against it.

That is the whole philosophy of the situation in a nutshell; and if you constantly bear it in mind, you will feel its helpfulness. Raise your head, expand your chest and draw in your abdomen, straighten your back and knees, step out buoyantly and firmly—in a word, resist gravitation, and you will find yourself young long after your are old.

DORCHESTER LOCALS ARE DEFEATED BY WEST ROXBURY.

On Dunbar Avenue Field, yesterday afternoon, the West Roxbury boys easily defeated the Locals of Dorchester by a score of 7 to 3, thereby getting even for the defeat received at the hands of the Locals earlier in the season.

The Mahoney brothers were in the points for the Locals, and it was by no means due to their work that the Dorchester boys went down in defeat. Chris Mahoney made four beautiful assists, struck out ten men and met the ball for one clean single.

Errors, mixed with sleepy playing in the field in the fourth inning, when the Roxbury boys made six runs on two hits, tells the story of the Locals' defeat.

Kammer, captain of the Roxbury boys, was in the game all over and on two occasions had to lift his cap in answer to the applause of the crowd. Galvin was a close second with three hits, with a total of six and four assists.

The infield of the Roxbury boys was like a stone wall, and it had to be a swift ball that went through it.

FIELDER JONES IS ORDERED OFF GROUNDS.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Aug. 19. The White Sox were beaten in a ten inning game by New York to-day. The score was 4 to 2. The White Sox were outhit by the Highlanders who batted Smith freely at the close of the game. Chicago might have won if Chesbro had not been sent in to take Newton's place at the last of the eighth. Newton was being hit hard, and it looked like a complete victory when Griffith put the great spit ball thrower on the slab.

The Sox made only one hit off Chesbro and really had no chance to score. Smith pitched part of the game yesterday and he did so well that Jones thought he could win to-day. He succeeded in holding the score to a tie, with each team having two runs until the tenth inning when the Highlanders rapped him for three singles and put two men over the scoring pan.

Manager Jones was put out of the game and off the field at the beginning of the seventh inning for obstreperous language which he had used in the sixth. Holmes took his place in centrefield.

Smith started out as if he meant to make a strike out record. He fanned two men in the first and the second he struck the side out. This made five strike outs in two innings, but he was able to fan only two more.

Rain interfered with the game and Umpire Connolly was forced to call it for ten minutes in the last half of the sixth inning.

Two more games are to be played between the Sox and the Highlanders, one to-morrow and one Monday.

BOYLSTONS, 6; CHESTNUT HILL, 2.

The Boylstons of Jamaica Plain kept up their winning streak by defeating the strong Chestnut Hill A. C. at Franklin Park yesterday 6 to 2. The features were the pitching of Magee, batting of Navin and Richardson and a difficult catch by Miley.

BONITIVO WAS TOO FAST FOR THE HUMBUG.

Special to the Boston American.

Hull, Aug. 19. But two boats reported for the three races down on the Boston Yacht Club's calender for yesterday afternoon, and for this reason but little interest was shown.

In Class I, for boats measuring over twenty-seven feet, the Bonitivo, owned by G. H. Wightman, defeated Cole and Bacon's yacht Humbug by four minutes and twelve seconds. At no time did the Humbug have a look in.

A rattling easterly wind was the result of exceedingly fast time being made. The summary

GAMES YESTERDAY.

At Detroit—Boston-Detroit, rain.
At Chicago—New York 4, Chicago 2 (10 innings).
At St. Louis—St. Louis 1, Athletics 0.
At Cleveland—Washington-Cleveland, rain.

Special to the Sunday American.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 19.—The Champs were frustrated again by the rain to-day and failed to line up with the Tigers for the double-header that was scheduled and what was expected to be a feast for the fans.

This is the twenty-fifth time this season that the Champs have been set back by rain interfering with their schedule, and the team has been playing in hard luck with the hoodoo.

To-morrow if the weather clears, which looks likely, the two teams will meet in a brace of games, but there are now two extra games to be played which will have to be settled later, as the Champs leave here after the second contest to go to Cleveland for the last series with the Naps.

[illegible] "We are certainly up against it in the way of bad weather, but then there is no use of complaining as it won't help us any, and the only thing that we can do is to go ahead and make a bid to win all the games from now out."

The team is in great shape to play top ball, and every member of the team feel the lay-off was against them, as they figured on taking both games from the Tigers, but hope to make good to-morrow.

It will probably be Jesse Tannehill and Dinneen who will face the Tigers, with Killian and Kitson in the box for the home team.

ST. LOUIS, 1; ATHLETICS, 0.

Special to the Boston American.

St Louis, Mo., Aug. 19.—For the second time of the series the game between the Athletics and Browns went into extra innings, but this time the locals scored a victory. Howell won his own game in the tenth by a fly to deep left.

In the box Howell was invincible and administered a coat of whitewash to Mack's braves. Coakley also pitched a good game, but became a trifle erratic in the tenth. The score

RAIN AT CLEVELAND.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 19.—A sharp shower at 2 o'clock this afternoon flooded League Park and the Cleveland-Washington game was postponed. Two games will be played Monday. Manager Jake Stahl of the Washingtons is in Columbus trying to complete a deal for two players.

WALPOLE, A. C., 14; ALLSTON, 1.

Walpole A. C. defeated Allston 14 to 1 at Allston. The features of the game were the hitting of Kost, Kopp and Hart. Hart pitched a great game, fanning eighteen batters. Score:

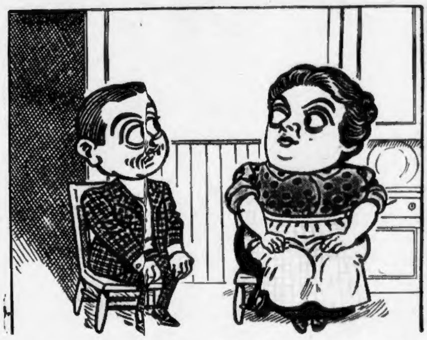
THE LOVE OF LULU AND LEANDER

Copyrighted, 1905, by the American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

1. LULU: "Why, Momme What is the matter! Why are you crying."
LEANDER: "Yes; Mrs. Peachtree, why these tears?"
MOMMER: "O-o-o-h! The cook has been on a rampage all day and she has now given me notice that she is going to leave. Oh, WHAT shall I do?"

2. LEANDER: "Leave it all to me, Mrs. Peachtree. I know how to manage these cooks."
MOMMER: "Oh, Leander, how can I ever thank you enough. But be careful, Leander."
LULU: "Oh, Mommer, isn't Leander brave and dauntless? But don't be rash, Leander, dear."

3. LEANDER: "Ah, good afternoon, Miss Mary. You are certainly looking fine this day. I just stepped in to have a little chat with you. Suppose we sit down."
MARY, THE COOK—Humph!



4. LEANDER: "Yes, I was telling Lulu only an hour ago that it was indeed an honor and a treat to come to this house and eat of your delicious cooking. Then there is your pleasant way and your happy, smiling countenance; it is certainly a pleasure to be around where you are."

5. LEANDER: "Happy the man who is fortunate enough to get you for a wife. Ah! how I envy him. If I weren't already engaged myself"——
LULU (speechless) "————!"

6. MARY, THE COOK (resuming her work, singing): "I lub yo', my honey, yes, I do."
LEANDER: "But, Lulu, look at the result of my"—
LULU: "Don't talk to me; BASE DECEIVER! I caught you in the very act of making love to her. For two pins I'd break my engagement, I would."
MOMMER: "WRETCH! BRUTE! That's what you are."

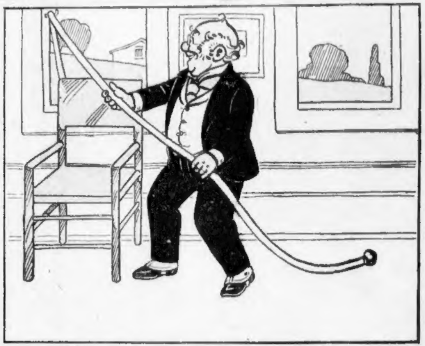
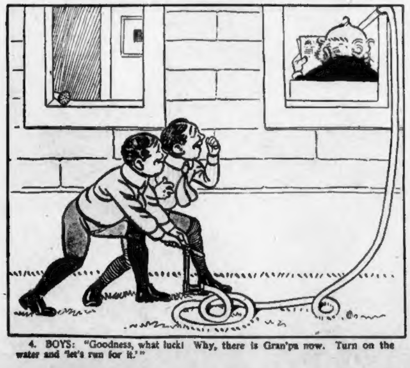
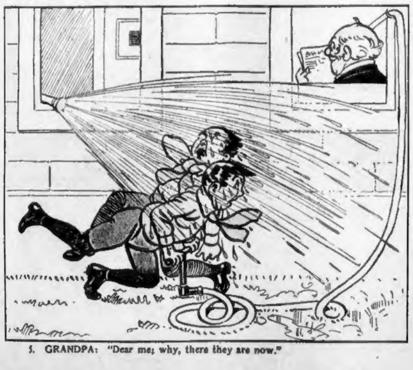
2. BOYS: "Ah, now we are ready for Gran'pa. This is the time we will give him a wetting down."



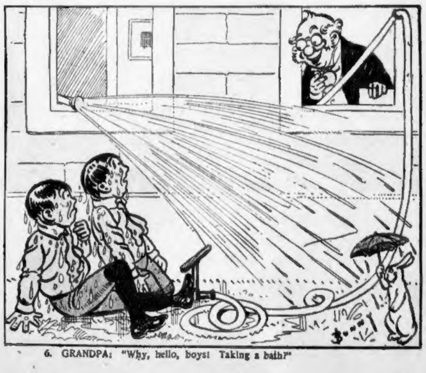
3. GRANDPA: "Here is where I spoil the game for those merry young mischiefs."



4. BOYS: "Goodness, what luck! Why, there is Gran'pa now. Turn on the water and 'let's run for it.'"



5. GRANDPA: "Dear me; why, there they are now."



6. GRANDPA: "Why, hello, boys! Taking a bath?"
